During his tenure, Noonan said he has proudly computerized the department, switched to civilian dispatchers, started the seasonal officer program, began billing for false alarms, and increased community police efforts with bike patrols and the town Police Assisting Local Schools [PALS] program.

"We've also been able to get quite a few grants," he said.

Cohasset Police Association President William Quigley praised Noonan.

"Noonan has done more for the department in his eight years than any other previous chief," he said. "He's modernized the department, been a great leader, has unbelievable integrity, and we hope he reconsiders.

"Whoever they hire is going to have some big shoes to fill."

Noonan was selected from field of six candidates for the job in 1993. Other in-house candidates at the time included Sgt. Robert Jackson and Sgt. Richard Abbadessa.

Noonan's salary last year was $69,572.85.

Haddad said he is in the process of setting up a search committee for Noonan's replacement.

"I think this is the most important appointment I make as Town Manager," he said. "I want to make sure I do this right, and am taking this very seriously. It's something that will have a major impact on the town of Cohasset."

Haddad has the authority to hire a police chief, but it is subject to a majority vote veto by the Board of Selectmen.

He said hopes to form a seven-member search committee, that would include a police chief and town manager from out-of-town, three town residents, preferably with teenage children, and somebody with long roots in the community. Two selectmen would serve in an advisory capacity.

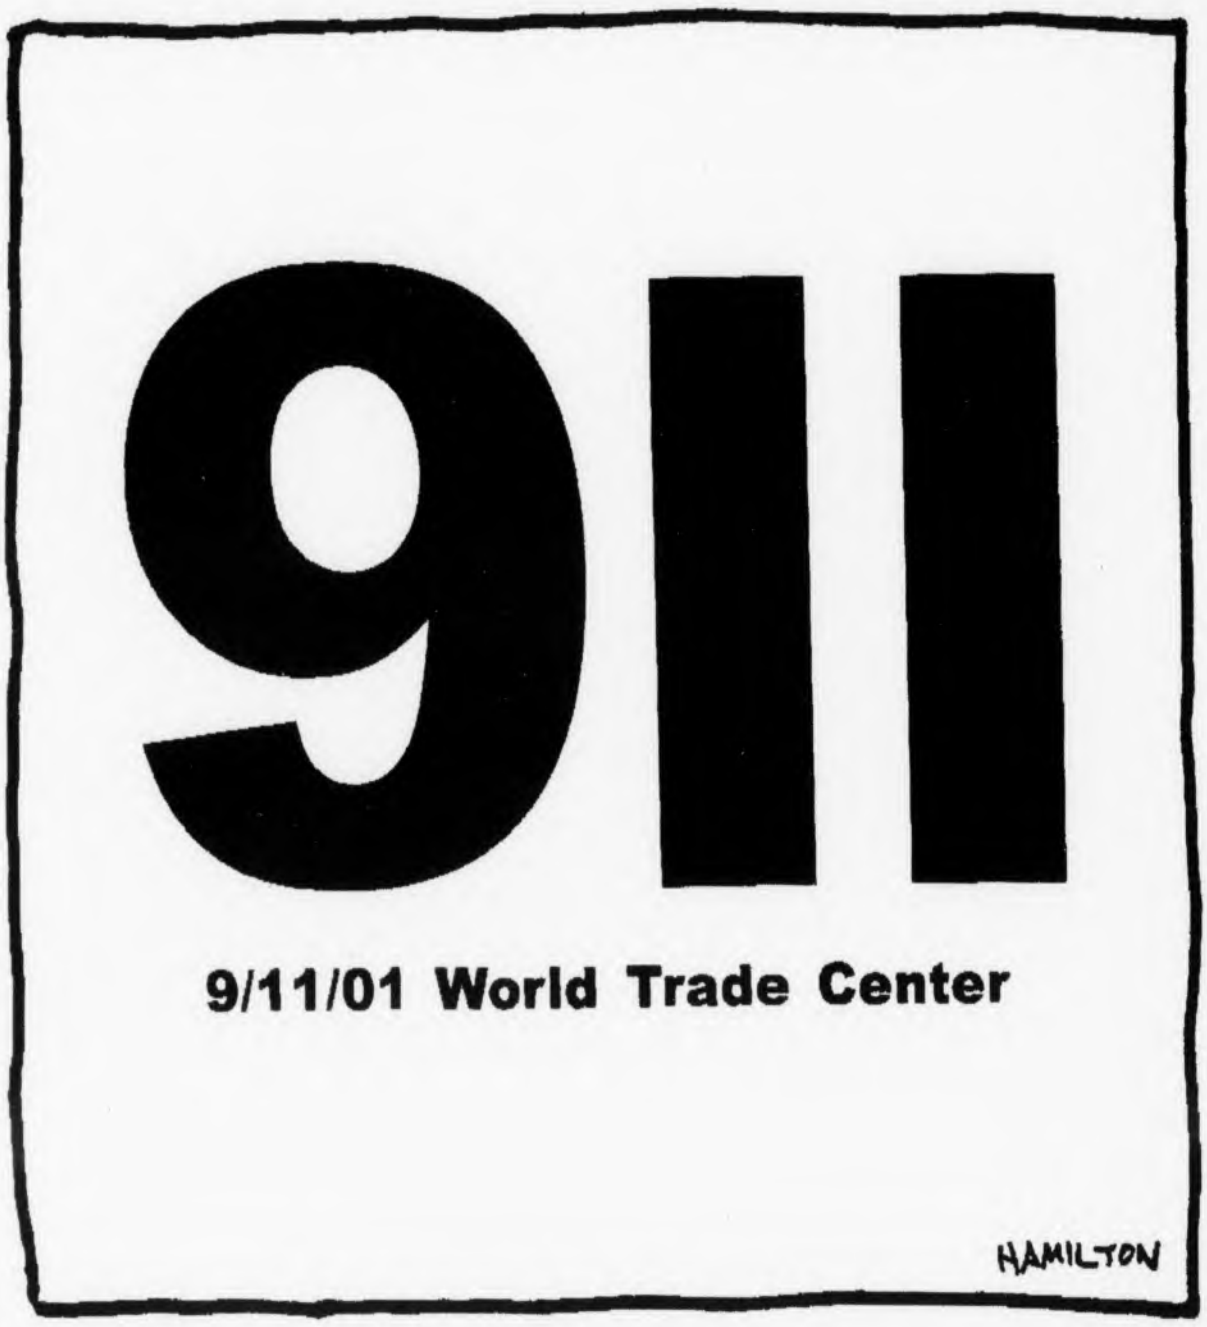
Prayer and prudence as terror strikes

It is a moment for stunned silence. As dust and smoke billows from what used to be the World Trade Center, we stare at TV screens in awe. How could this happen?

It is a moment for questions. Who perpetrated these multiple acts of terror? The casualties number in the thousands. How many have been killed, in how many places?



It is a moment for prayer. We scan our memory banks and wonder. Was anyone we know in lower Manhattan Tuesday morning? Did a neighbor or co-worker board American Airlines at Logan Tuesday morning, on a flight to Los Angeles that took a terrible detour? We pray for the safety of friends and relatives. We pray for all the victims we don't know. We pray for our country.

It is a moment for fear. We look for the next target, as if we could see into the minds of whatever unknown army has invaded the United States. We order evacuations of high-profile buildings, cancel public events. In this moment of terror, it is a time for prudence, not panic.

This moment of fear is also a moment for clear-headedness. It is not the time to jump to conclusions about who is to blame, or what should be done. When the responsibility for this assault has been pinned down, the United States should respond with strength and ferocity. This atrocity cannot go unanswered.

But let us not turn our anger on our neighbors. In the initial shock after the Oklahoma City bombing, some Americans directed their resentment toward people whose only crime was to share the religion or nationality of those mistakenly assumed to be among the suspects. Let us not make that mistake again, either in our official reactions or in our private conversations.

Let us instead join together, in prayer for the victims, in patience with the precautions that must be taken, and in the conviction that no suicidal terrorist can rattle American resolve and no fiery crash can damage America's greatness.

If you've got one, fly it

By Barbara McCarthy
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

This area is pretty affluent and many of us have traveled abroad. When home again on USA soil the first thing most of us do is to get a drink of water from a water fountain and quietly thank fate (or God) that we live here and wouldn't trade freedom for any wonder of the world.

That one more thing is to fly the American Flag — everyday.

There is no point in restating the obvious about the events that took place on Sept. 11 in New York, Washington, D.C., Pittsburgh and Boston. However there are things as citizens that we can do right now, donate money and blood and one more thing.

That one more thing is to fly the American Flag — everyday. Follow the rules for respect for our flag. To the best of my knowledge, here they are. Up at dawn, down at dusk unless illuminated. No flying in inclement weather, unless illuminated. No touching the ground. There are more rules, but this probably covers the basics.

So, if you have a flag, fly it. If not, get one. We are all in this together.

Barbara McCarthy lives in Hingham.

Train ridership on the rise

TO THE EDITOR:

Even at this late stage in the approval process for commuter rail restoration on the Greenbush Line, voices are still speaking to argue the respective merits and flaws in the issue. We still hear sweeping assertions and blanket denials concerning pollution, safety, popularity, ridership projections — while the Greenbush project slowly makes its tedious way past the scrutiny of one state or federal body after the other as its budget continues to climb. One point of disagreement has centered around the purported uniqueness of our town and area — supposedly vitiating any attempts by advocates to compare our situation with that of any other locality or region.

Nonetheless, the Greenbush project and, indeed, the entire Old Colony restoration are part of an ongoing nationwide groundswell in which commuter rail is gaining or regaining wide-scale acceptance as a viable and benign logistical mode.

I had occasion recently to peruse the August, 2001, issue of "Railway Age," a leading industry periodical, and found some items that create an interesting context for the issue at hand, including an article entitled "Beantown Boom" (pp. 49-51):

• Commuter rail ridership rose 4.3 percent nationally in the first quarter of 2001.

• The light rail increase reached 7.5 percent in Boston, making the MBTA a top performer in this category (tied with Portland, Ore.).

• The MBTA is now the country's fourth-largest public transit system overall, having grown by nearly 20 percent during the last decade, and it is expected to maintain that rate over the next 20 years. Two-thirds of its 1.2 million daily trips are by rail (streetcars, subway, commuter rail).

• MBTA commuter rail weekday ridership is nearing 133,000 — a 70-percent rise during the past decade. A roster of 80 locomotives and 362 coaches (with 15 additional bi-levels now starting to arrive) currently provides some 469 daily trains. Twenty-seven bi-levels are earmarked for the Greenbush Line operation.

• MBTA commuter rail parking lots currently offer 32,000 spaces, and the current capital campaign includes $19 million for parking expansion.

Like many statistics, these carry little weight when cited in isolation, but gain some heft in the context of a column by William W. Millar, president of the American Public Transportation Association (p. 68):

• U.S. commuter rail ridership rose 5.2 percent last year, to 411 million trips.

• U.S. commuter rail currently operates 3,825 route-miles, plus 134 miles being built and 300 under design.

• New commuter rail lines have opened in Burlington, Vt. and Seattle, with major expansions in planning or under way in Chicago, Dallas-Ft. Worth, Miami and Seattle, to name a few.

• New commuter rail systems are currently in development in Nashville, Anchorage, Minneapolis, Salt Lake City, Kansas City, Denver, Houston, Charlotte and Portland, Ore.

Without suggesting that "it's happening all over the place" or equating our situation with those of other areas, I do find some reinforcement to my long-standing perception that a realization is forming in a sizeable number of communities that commuter rail service makes sense as auto traffic density continues to grow with no solution in sight within this mode (cf. the Journal's editorial of Aug. 31). And without denying the particular factors surrounding the Greenbush project, I stand by my personal prediction that, 1. those trains will fill quickly even as commuter boat patronage grows, and, 2. they will not destroy the towns they traverse.

TO THE EDITOR:

As I've had the privilege of occupying this space from time to time, I thought it is certainly in line for some praise to be delivered to so many in town.

The transition to the school year is amazing, and perhaps in Cohasset there hasn't been so much construction in half a century at the beginning of the school year. Heck, last year it was the roads under construction, now it seems to be everything else.

Headlines from other towns have indicated that the transition and the construction aren't easy, and certainly nothing which can be taken for granted. Kudos to those who planned for what was to occur, and carried it out very well. Nice going so far, and good luck in the days ahead!

PSO calendar is just terrific!

TO THE EDITOR

It didn't seem possible, but the Community Relations group has outdone itself on the PSO calendar! Those of you who have received it will agree that it's even better than last year's, and last year's was an absolute treat!

Please join me in thanking Beth Seraikas and Vicki Neaves for their help in pulling together the administrative details of the calendar. Sally Sisson is the talented artist who did the illustrations for the calendar, and I know you'll all want to recognize how very special her drawings are, particularly for this difficult year of living through the renovations at Deer Hill and the Middle/High School. My hope is that her whimsical portrayal of the elements of construction will remind us all that the end result will be worth the wait!

A very special thank you goes to Derry Schwantner for all of her talent and help in organizing the overall project with the Community Relations group. Both Derry and Sally spent hours putting together this calendar, and they deserve a "round of applause" for the end result!

If you would like a PSO calendar and didn't receive one in the mail, please contact the office at one of the schools; they have a few extras on hand. This calendar is just one of the many services the PSO provides for the schools and the community. For those of you with children in the system, and even those of you who don't have children enrolled in the schools this year, I hope you'll support the many functions of the PSO throughout the year and become active advocates for excellence in education in Cohasset.

Thanks again to Derry, Sally, Vicki and Beth for a wonderful calendar that will serve us well throughout the year.

How can we continue calling this development?

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

These properties in the photos are currently being "developed". I put developed in quotes because the word development means to advance, to further, to promote the growth of. But from an ecological viewpoint the opposite is happening. Distinctive and beautiful Cohasset granite ledge has been destroyed forever, trees cut down, wildlife habitat erased, and rain runoff increased. The trophy houses to be built will consume enormous amounts of energy, increase global warming, and add poisons to the air we breathe. How can we continue calling this development?

If there were mental hospitals for towns we'd be committed to protect ourselves from ourselves.

A line from "Reflections on Bullough's Pond, Economy and Ecosystem in New England," by Diana Muir, University Press of New England 2000, p 254, expresses how many of us feel about this:

"An emerging consensus now views our common interest in the functional integrity of natural systems as more important than the right of individuals to extract a profit from those systems."

Before Earth Day 1970 most of us believed "development" was good for Cohasset, adding to the tax base, converting "raw land" into attractive suburban lots, making handsome profits for sellers, realtors, bankers and builders. Early English common law recognized the value of natural resources and protected them. But during New England's Industrial Revolution, laws were changed, allowing property owners to utilize the land for maximum profit. Cohasset's Zoning Bylaws and Subdivision Regulations, which actually encourage natural degradation, originated during this pre-1970 period of ecological innocence.

Jerusalem Road: Granite ledge smashed into gravel

After Earth Day 1970 we began learning that suburban sprawl, to give this so-called "development" its proper name, is destroying Cohasset. We're beginning to understand and accept that carbon dioxide is indeed bringing about global warming, while trees absorb carbon dioxide and produce life-giving oxygen. Cutting down trees is suicidal. We're learning that replacing natural vegetation with buildings, asphalt, and lawns prevents rainfall from being absorbed into the water table, instead hastening its runoff into the sea. Removing natural vegetation is suicidal. We're learning that building homes in locations where every trip requires the use of a car is worsening Cohasset's smog and accelerating global climate change. Sprawl is suicidal.

Thus we find ourselves in the awkward position of having land use regulations, economic structures, laws, and social customs that promote ecological suicide. If there were mental hospitals for towns we'd be committed to protect ourselves from ourselves. There was a television character in the 50s, Riley, whose oft-repeated line seems fitting: "What a humiliating situation this is!"

I don't have any easy answers. But we've got to start asking the right questions before it's too late. It's already too late for the age-old granite ledge in the photos. Cohasset's land use regulations must be brought into the post-1970 era and must recognize the value and sanctity of our natural world. There are ways for people to live in Cohasset without devastating the granite ledge, the air, the water, the soil, and the wildlife. Beautiful ways.

Shaken to the core

MY VIEW

RICK COLLINS

I'll admit it, something just didn't feel right Tuesday morning. I had hoped to get up early and go running, but 7 a.m. quickly turned into 8:40 a.m. and I was running late. I began to rush, but during the course of my morning routine, I felt distant from what I was doing.

Maybe it was the pressure of being late and facing a crush of deadlines at work, combined with the need to pack for a planed golf escape to South Carolina that was supposed to start the following day.

I first got a hint of what had been going on when I flipped through the stations on my radio, and heard a morning talk show host commenting on smoke billowing from a building. In what would be the last moment of my blissful ignorance, I switched to WBZ-AM and began to hear about the amazing, yet horrifying and utterly catastrophic events developing in New York City.

The next two hours consisted of sitting in the Cohasset Mariner office, listening to a small radio. I sat staring at my desk, occasionally glancing up to watch my editor, Mary Ford, blanch with every new detail.

I'm 23 years old. I was born two years after the Vietnam War ended.

My stomach churned with every explosion and I further dislocated my gaping jaw when the Pentagon was hit.

I tried to rid the horrific story from my mind by banishing the radio to Mary's desk, putting on headphones and attempting to lose myself in Crosby Stills & Nash's first album.

But one of the two towers collapsed shortly after 10 a.m., and another around 10:30. Mary tried not to let her shock and near panic come through when her eldest son called from his military base in Germany.

About 11 a.m., I drove from Hingham Square down Route 3A and into Cohasset Village, a drive I have made hundreds of times since coming to the Mariner 15 months ago, but it had never seemed as surreal as it was on this day.

A gorgeous New England day, beautiful old towns, yet it was completely quiet.

Few cars were on the road, presumably a testament to the mesmerizing events unfolding in living color in people's living rooms. Even birds seemed to respect the situation by singing quieter.

Or maybe it was just always this way and Tuesday was the first day I was able to appreciate it.

I got my first visual images of what had happened while watching a network news recap on a small television in Cohasset Town Hall.

Like a scene out of a sci-fi movie, network television showed a large plane soaring, at full-speed, straight into the second tower, spewing forth a stories-high fireball. Read that again: A plane flew straight into the thousand-foot high tower.

Then I stared in disbelief as the towers simply crumbled, 100 stories down onto the streets below.

The worst part was realizing all of it was real.

This isn't supposed to happen in America.

The America I know is supposed to be a bastion of refuge for those afflicted by political and religious conflicts in other parts of the world. We're not supposed to be the ones attacked.

Very few can remember the last time America's freedom was threatened so close to home.

I'm 23 years old. I was born two years after the Vietnam War ended. The only war action/semi-threat to American democracy I have experienced was the Gulf War — which ended as soon as it got started.

I was seven years old in the summer of 1984, the summer of the Los Angeles Olympics, Bruce Springsteen's "Born in the U.S.A." and President Ronald Reagan — all making me proud to be an American.

USA! USA! USA!

And despite coming of age, developing a cynical side, and becoming aware of the nation's many flaws, I was always able to hold onto that shred of certainty that the United States was above the mass tragedies frequently seen in other countries.

I was relatively unaffected as a senior in high school in 1995 when the Oklahoma City bombing stunned the country. When bombers failed to blow up the World Trade Center in 1993, it further reinforced my feeling that we were invincible — or at least safe.

But this is unfathomable. A bad horror movie becoming all too real. A worst-case scenario coming true, live and in Technicolor, playing out above the crowded streets of downtown Manhattan. The twin towers are gone. The Pentagon was successfully attacked. The number of deaths will probably reach five-digits.

I have spent the hours since the attack, up until writing this sentence, watching television reports, talking to people, and trying to make sense of what has happened; what the long-term impacts will be; how our lives will never be the same; dreading the moment I hear about someone I know was killed in the attack.

I have been shaken to the core, and anyone who has experienced that feeling knows the fear that comes with it. An uncertainty of the future, a self-loathing feeling of gullibility. I wanting to cry on a few occasions, but was unable, still frozen in shock. I found myself sitting in my car outside of the Osgood School watching kids enjoy their recess period, jealous of their still intact innocence, wishing I could go back to being seven and care only about not breaking my glasses at recess. For the first time in recent memory, I, the agnostic and callused reporter, felt the urge/need to go to church.

But perhaps this is the unfortunate event needed to wake the American people up from their increasing complacency and apathy. In my gut, I truly believe the American response to this crisis will be impressive and overwhelming – a blue print of proper civil action to be admired by the world. People will remain in lines waiting to give blood until the need is no longer. Families will pull together, politics will be forgotten, and thousands of volunteers and millions of dollars will be sent to aid in the rebuilding effort.

And in doing so, America will remember how it got so great in the first place.

HEALTH NOTES

Town hires local goosebuster!

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

One issue, which has gone from a nuisance in town to a health threat, has been geese. Apparently, there are two strains of wild geese which are making their presence in town: Canada geese as they fly through on their way south in the winter and north in the summer, and local geese, originally raised by local farmers who used to use them as decoys.

Now some of these geese are wintering over, and becoming real pests. So have swans, in Straits Pond; more than 70 swans have been counted in that body of water. But the geese are all around Lily Pond, especially in Lily Pond Lane where scores are to be found leaving their feces adding to algae-causing nutrients in the pond.

Fortunately, with some small help from the Board of Health and possibly the Water Commission we may have a solution for a goose outbreak anywhere in town. With the encouragement of the BOH, Judy St. Peter has bought a dog, "Zinger". Zinger is featured elsewhere in the Mariner and you are urged to read more about the town's potential new employee. Zinger, a Border Collie, comes with impressive credentials, having trained on sheep, and also goose movements and identification. He is receiving further training by his current owner, who has researched the goose problem in considerable depth, cruising the Internet and doing much reading and study.

Now Zinger is ready. He's already started, and is clearing geese from Lily Pond Lane with great success. Zinger is taken out frequently to high goose areas and released. He chases the geese with great joy, and after several such forays the goose population begins to thin. Apparently, it's just a matter of keeping at it.

He's already started, and is clearing geese from Lily Pond Lane with great success.

The most important time of the year is early in the spring when nesting begins. The Board has had numerous complaints about geese and swans and feels that Zinger is a real asset to the town. Therefore if funding becomes available, the Board has agreed to pay for hourly visits to various areas in town where geese may be a problem, particularly to our water supply, and the middle-high school playing fields, which has been threatened in the past by high coliform readings from fowl.

Now when such a problem arises, we hope to have the staff on board to solve it: Zinger!

Hazardous product collection day

This Saturday is the day the South Shore Recycling Cooperative appears at the Recycling Transfer Facility on Cedar Street. All civic-minded citizens should recycle, but everyone should get rid of toxic and hazardous materials in their homes. It doesn't make sense to store potentially harmful stuff in your home. The hazardous materials collection will begin at the RTF at 9 a.m. and close at 1 p.m., but when they reach their limit, they will close, so it's better to get there early.

Mercury thermometer exchange

Also, this year we began a mercury thermometer exchange which will have its kickoff at the RTF on the 15th, and will continue thereafter at the Board of Health Office in Town Hall during regular working hours. You may receive a digital thermometer for any mercury thermometer you return. Sorry, only one to a family, regardless of the number of thermometers you return. We've talked about the harmful effects of mercury before, but you can pick up additional facts from the literature at the RTF or the Board of Health.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

Careless drivers

TO THE EDITOR:

In response to my letter noting the needless risks taken by of pedestrians who walk or jog with their backs to traffic, Ken Ingber writes that motorists should drive carefully on our winding roads.

Well, sure, but that's like preaching to the choir. Careful drivers will remain so, but there will always be careless or distracted drivers, drivers with poor eyesight or reactions, drivers in a hurry etc.

Smart drivers are alert to the hazards of such drivers and are prepared to take evasive action. And so should pedestrians — by walking or jogging on the left, facing the traffic, rather than foolishly turning their backs to the unknown.

Support 'Katie's Team'

TO THE EDITOR:

Autumn approaches, and our family is reminded of many things. As most of you know, in autumn of 1998, our daughter, Katie, was diagnosed with Ewings Sarcoma, a childhood cancer of the bone. Katie endured major surgery and a yearlong protocol of chemotherapy that ended in autumn of 1999. She has remained "in remission" for almost two years now and we thank God every day. This autumn Katie will celebrate her 13th birthday.

Cancer is a dreaded disease that most of us are much too familiar with. It has touched the lives of millions of people. Most people remember feelings of fear and helplessness upon hearing the diagnosis of cancer. As parents, we will always remember.

But we also remember feeling so grateful, both then and now, to have the Jimmy Fund Clinic of the Dana Farber Cancer Institute. There we received compassionate care, emotional support, medical treatment and especially a sense of hope. We are writing today to ask you to help us give back something to the place and people who continue to give us and so many others that hope.

On Sunday, Sept. 30, "Katie's Team" will again lace up sneakers to participate in our third Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk (which also turns 13 this autumn). The walk follows the historic 26.2-mile Hopkinton to Copley Square route of the Boston Marathon, with posters of "walk heroes," patients of the Jimmy Fund Clinic, along the route to inspire the walkers. In 1999, Katie was a "walk Hero"...to us, she still is. We will be walking to celebrate life, the power of family and friends, to honor the courage of the children and adults struggling with cancer and to honor the memory of those we have lost.

Many of you have given generously to the Jimmy Fund already and we appreciate your support more than we can say. Because of your generosity "Katie's Team" has been able to raise more than $33,000 over the past two years. We ask you to join us again this year in giving tribute to the "walk heroes" and all others who are struggling because of cancer. Checks can be made out to "Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk" and sent to us before Sept. 30 if possible. Each and every gift is critical. Great strides have been made in the search for a cure, but we still have a long way to go.

With heartfelt thanks for your contribution and support.

Greenbush construction to disturb wetlands

But project will still move ahead

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

As the Greenbush commuter rail restoration project continues to charge ahead like a bull — it's now up to town conservation commissions to play the role of the china shop owner and protect as much of their delicate merchandise as they can.

The restored commuter rail line will run through one of the wettest areas of Cohasset and could impact as much as 70,000 square feet of wetlands and vegetative area in the town. And although the Cohasset Conservation Commission is required under the Massachusetts Wetlands Protection Act to deny any application that would disturb more than 5,000 square feet of wetlands — the MBTA expects to receive a waiver from the Department of Environmental Protection and continue to push the project through.

A look at a map of Cohasset shows that the town is essentially bisected by the rail bed, dormant since 1959. As it cuts its way through the heart of the town, parallel to North and South Main Street, past Woodside Cemetery, through Cohasset Village — the bed is shadowed by a series of wetlands.

For six miles through town from Hingham to the Scituate town line, a long thin wet area runs beside the planned path of the Greenbush commuter rail line. The trail follows the flow of James Brook from Sanctuary Pond into the village, before curving and heading out between Jacob's Meadow and Ellms Meadow.

The rail bed itself is under water thanks to a number of vernal pools along the way, particularly between the Beechwood Street grade crossing and Scituate town line.

Despite the predetermined outcome, representatives from the MBTA, and Sverdrup, its engineering consultants, formally kicked off the local permitting process of the Greenbush restoration project by appearing before the Cohasset Conservation Commission last week.

The MBTA expects to receive a waiver from the Department of Environmental Protection and continue to push the project through.

The MBTA's notice of intent was the only scheduled agenda item for the two-plus hour meeting held in the Town Hall Auditorium, and attended by a number of abutters.

Although the commission knows it will reject the application only to have it later overturned, co-chairman Jim Dedes said the board still plays a crucial role in the permitting process.

"The state law is administered at a local level," he said. "We'll deny it, but it will be sent to DEP with a list of conditions."

Dedes said the conditions will try to regulate work on the project to prevent any additional wetland and vegetative area damage, beyond the 70,000 square feet the MBTA has said it will impact. The conditions involve aspects of the project, such as erosion controls along the work site, the time of year certain work could be done, and work inspection and monitoring. The MBTA has agreed to replicate all impacted wetlands in a 2 to 1 ratio, in accordance with town bylaws.

Sverdup engineer Lars Carlson, who helped design the Old Colony Line's Middleboro and Plymouth branches, said the 800-foot long station platform will be sandwiched between a wetland area and two vernal pools.

Vernal pools

A vernal pool is defined as an area that is wet for just a few months a year, but hosts a number of amphibious animals and aquatic plants. MBTA engineers found 11 such pools along the rail line, including a5,000 square foot pool on the rail bed near King Street, which it called not much more than a "puddle," and two more vernal pools by the Castle Road grade-crossing.

Carlson also said there was an "extensive area of puddling" south of Beechwood Street on the rail bed. He contended that the area was formed when the old tracks and ballast were removed, causing the failure of the storm-water drainage system in that stretch..

"It's the single biggest wetland impact area in Cohasset," said Carlson. "There's 24, 500 square feet of impact in that area alone."

The MBTA plans to mitigate the impact by installing four, 12-by-12 foot culverts at the high water mark.

The MBTA has chosen three sites to host the required wetland replication areas; two of the sites used to be wetlands, and would actually be considered a wetlands restoration. One site is at the station, the former site of Winter Garden skating rink, and the other two will be behind the two properties adjacent to station.

Michael Dick, a former conservation commission member and former member of the town mitigation committee, questioned why the MBTA had chosen to replicate all of the wetlands in one area.

"You're impacting wetlands near Beechwood Street and replicating them two miles away," he said. "Is that really a fair exchange?"

Carlson reminded that the MBTA was replacing the wetland areas impacted at a two to one ratio, above what it's legally required to do, and that the ground near Beechwood Street was not conducive for wetland replication.

"If we could have found a suitable site, we would have, but that area is very rocky, with a high level of bedrock," he said.

Town conservation agent Paul Shea reminded the MBTA it needs approval from the state Natural Heritage & Endangered Species Program for its plans to deal with spotted turtles and Mystic Valley Amphipods, two protected species found along the rail bed.

The hearing was continued until Oct. 4, at 7:30 p.m., at Cohasset Town Hall, with the public welcome. The MBTA also plans to meet with the Hingham Conservation Commission on Oct. 1.

Hingham and Cohasset are the only towns two have signed a mitigation agreement.

Besides Cohasset, the project will also disturb more than 5,000 square feet of wetland and vegetative area in Hingham and Scituate.

Once the public hearing is completed, the commission will deny the permit, but attach a set of conditions. The application will then be appealed to the DEP commissioner's office where a waiver will be granted, providing the MBTA can show that there is no reasonable alternative to the project, it is in the best interest of the public, and adequate mitigation has been provided. The MBTA can also appeal any conditions made by the town. The state Dept. of Environmental Management [DEM] can also add conditions.

Once permitted, the project will be designed and sent back for approval at the 30 percent and 60 percent final design phase for town comment, and make sure the conditions are being adhered to. The plan is then subject to a final review when 90 percent completed.

MBTA explains Greenbush scheduling

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Aside from outlining its plans to deal with wetland issues, the MBTA also gave the Cohasset Conservation Commission an informal construction schedule Thursday [see related story].

The $410 million Greenbush commuter rail line will take approximately two years to build, and should haul its first riders in 2005, according to MBTA director of environmental affairs, Andrew Brennan.

The line will be built using the design-build method, where a contractor both designs and builds the project. The design-build method has never been used in Massachusetts to construct a rail line. The only public transportation project in the state using design-build is the Route 3 widening project north of Boston.

The MBTA has narrowed its list of potential contractors down to four. The project is currently out to bid, and a builder should be in place by December, Brennan said.

The project still needs a waiver of the Massachusetts Wetlands Protection Act from the state Department of Environmental Protection, and Section 61 approval under the Massachusetts Environmental Protection Act, which is essentially its building permit.

Lars Carlson, of Sverdup Consulting, the MBTA's engineering firm, gave an outlined construction plan:

- installation of erosion and sediment control along the work sites to help control storm water run-off
- clean-up of vegetation that has grown up along the rail bed during its 43-year dormancy
- sub-grade the foundation of the rail bed and build any-needed retaining walls. "It needs a lot of work," said Carlson.
- replace the 10 culverts found along the rail bed, and upsize where needed, such as along James Brook
- construct the catch basins and drainage systems
- Σ build the station parking lot, platform and drainage system
- fence-off the length of the right-of-way, leaving a four-inch gap at the bottom in certain areas to allow wildlife to cross
- install the tracks and ballast. Carlson said the ties will be made of concrete, except for the switches at the turnouts which will be wood.
- redesign the grade crossings, install gates, vibration mats, and median barriers.
- construct the new overpass at Rocky Lane
- make the needed intersection improvements at Route 3A, including installing a new traffic light and adding a left-turn only lane

Because its being built by the design/build method, the project can be designed and built in segments. Once each segment has reached the 30 and 60 percent design phase, it will brought before the town conservation commission for comment on whether all the conditions have been met. Once at the 90 percent design phase, it will be subject to a final review by the board.

Conservation Commission co-chairman James Dedes said the different levels of review are standard procedure.

"You don't design a house, and then bring it before the board for us to say, 'It's nice, but move it 50 feet to the left,'" he said.

Barry eyes transfer site off Route 3A

Bobo said one health risk could be with gypsum found in plaster.

"When it breaks down, it gives up methane," he said. "Presumably, it would all be indoors, and the only health threat would be if the building wasn't built properly, or had floor drains."

John McNabb of SAFE [Stop Any Further Expansion], which opposed expansion of CHL, claimed Barry's plan also brings health dangers. McNabb participated in Abington's long battle against Barry's proposed transfer facility there.

"There are real substantive environmental issues that will show it's not a good idea to do it," he said.

McNabb said even without household trash, the transfer facility would still produce a type of leachate, especially when trucks are washed, and much like CHL, would produce considerable noise and odors. He was also concerned with the amount of traffic the facility would bring to an area already poised for a traffic explosion.

"You have Cohasset Colliston, you'll soon have Hingham Lumber and the MBTA, traffic at that location is congested even without the transfer station," he pointed out.

Town Meeting last year voted to rezone the area where Barry hopes to build the facility as a "Technology" district.

Zoning officer Robert Egan was not sure if a transfer facility is an allowed use in that district.

Matt Bilodeau and Greg O'Connell

These two midfielders for Cohasset's boys soccer team were instrumental in controlling the middle of the field in Friday's impressive 7-2 season opening win over Milton. Bilodeau set up five of the goals taking the kicks on set plays, and O'Connell wound up with a goal and two assists.

Rebuilding? Perhaps not

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Lady Skippers of Field Hockey opened up their season with two games that clearly show that this is not a rebuilding year.

Eleven seniors removed from last year's 14 victory season, 2001 looked like it would be a chance for the Lady Skippers to reload for the future.

But after the season's two opening games, this does not appear to be the case.

Cohasset opened the season on Friday at the hostile home of Div. 1 Silver Lake. Cohasset then proceeded to shut down their host's offense on the way to a 1-0 win.

"I didn't expect to win," confessed Cohasset head coach Deb Bostwick, "but it was beautiful."

With a late arrival of the bus, Cohasset was forced to play with almost no warm-up time. But the visitors came out strongly in the first half, gaining many offensive chances.

The Skippers finally converted one of their opportunities when senior Suzanne Lynner's shot rebounded to senior captain Abbey Coakley. Coakley then tapped the ball to newcomer sophomore forward Kelly Hurley, who scored the tip-in with eight minutes left in the first half.

In net, junior Sera Genovese recorded a shut-out in her first career varsity start, making six "key saves", according to Bostwick.

"They would have scored at least four goals," lauded the veteran coach.

Bostwick was very pleased with

Coach continues to look to future as golf team starts 0-2

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

With more than half his team comprised of freshman, Cohasset High golf coach Torin Sweeney is obviously looking to the future.

Though the second year coach is still giving his 10 upperclassmen and handful of returning players first shot at playing in the top eight, he is also swinging his 11 freshman in and out of his lineup trying to find some consistency.

"We have some very promising freshman players and I want to give them a chance to show what they can do in varsity competition," Sweeney explains. "They're the future of the program, so you might say this is kind of a flux year for us."

This helps explain why the converted football coach didn't seem all that put out by the fact that his team dropped its first two matches of the 2001 spring campaign.

Last Thursday, the Skippers fell in their opener to East Bridgewater playing on the Vikings' home Ridders Country Club course, 37.5-16.5.

Senior captain Will Moody led the way, shooting a team best 45 for the nine holes. Playing from the number five spot, he was also the only C.H.S. player to get the better of his competition, winning the holes 5.5-3.5.

The top of the lineup card was filled out with the names of freshman D.J. Sylvia and Colin McGruder, who earned those designations based on their superior preseason rounds.

Senior Pat Reardon (number 3) and juniors Greg O'Brien (four) and Mike Calorio (six) rounded out the Cohasset lineup card.

With freshmen away at orientation on Monday, Sweeney was forced to face the mettle of the South Shore League—defending Div. 2 state champion Norwell—shorthanded.

To no great surprise, the Clippers took it to the Skippers, 8.5-0.5. Norwell was led by defending individual state champion Ben Spitz, who shot a 37.

Cohasset's lone half point was earned by Robin Murphy, playing out of the fifth spot. Moody, playing at number two, shot a team best 45 for the Skippers.

Gridders KO Spellman in opener

By David Ingber

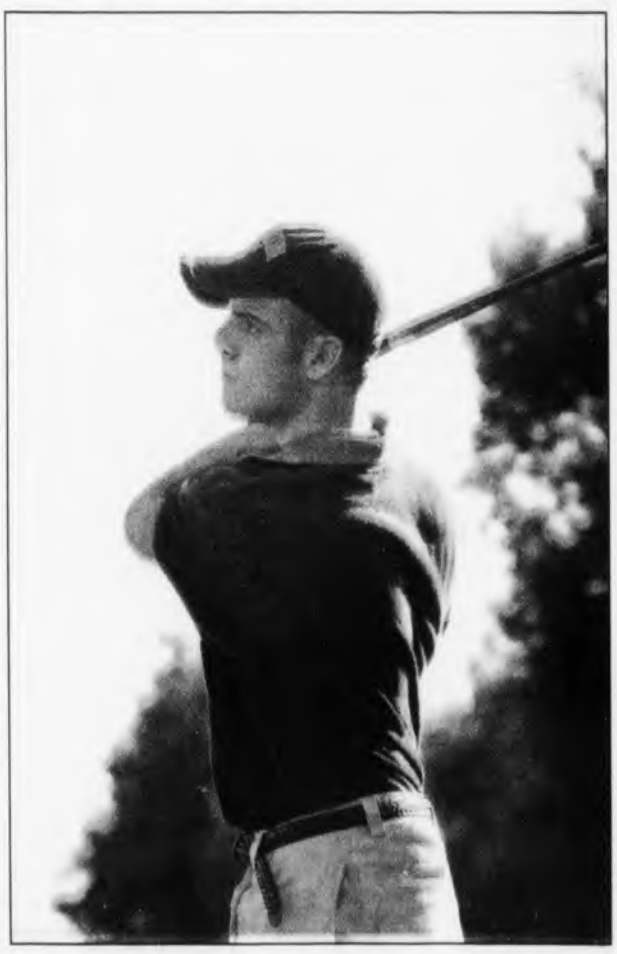
It was an encouraging performance on many levels, but disappointing on one big one.

The Cohasset football Skippers opened their season with a tidy 7-0 win on Saturday in Brockton, pleasing the crowd with a well balanced offense, a punishing defense, and good execution on special teams.



One might argue that the entire afternoon's heroics, however, was overshadowed by the team's second key loss of the year to injury.

Senior captain Liam Martin, an excellent athlete all of last year for football, basketball and track, broke his ankle making a side-line reception, and will be out for at least the football season. Martin was one of the few players who played on both sides of the ball, a talented wide receiver, cornerback, and return man.

The loss is especially brutal to the team since senior captain Nick Bolster, also a huge contributor on offense and defense, is unable to play because of a detached retina in his right eye.

"I can honestly say that we have lost the two best receivers in the league," reported fourth year

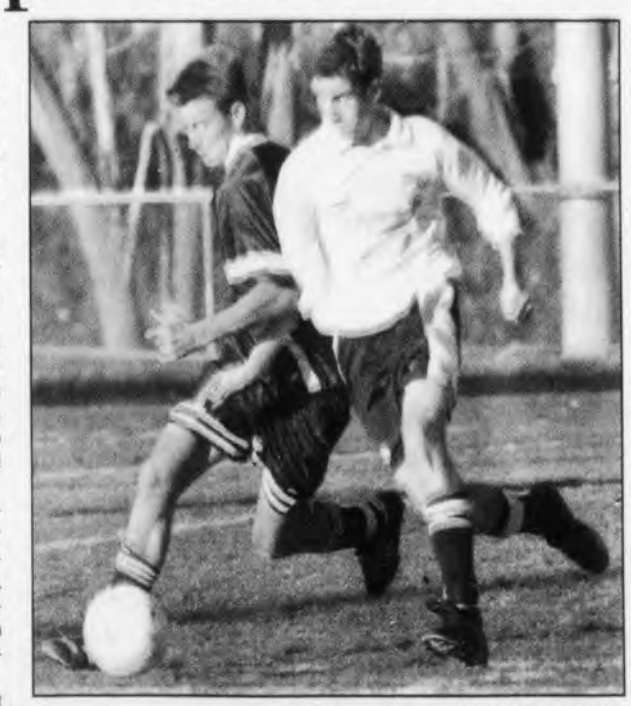
Skippers cast off Wildcats

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM



It seemed strange over the last few weeks to hear local high school soccer followers whispering that little Cohasset High might actually be the team to beat for the South Shore League boys soccer crown this fall.

A team from C.H.S.—by far the smallest school in the seven member league—"the favorite?!?" Well, that's almost unheard of.

Nevertheless, the decibel level on those whispers rose more than a little when the Skippers blasted much larger Div. 2 Milton in its season opener on Friday, 7-2, behind two goals apiece from senior Tim Baird and sophomore Chris Clark.

The host Cohasset squad dominated the middle of the field pretty much throughout the lopsided contest, with Greg O'Connell (one goal, two assists) and Matt Bilodeau controlling much of the tempo with their heads up play and steady playmaking.

Five of Cohasset's tallies against the Wildcats came off set plays and Bilodeau was the one taking all of those kicks.

Cohasset's Greg O'Connell (in white) was key to controlling the tempo in Friday's season opening 7-2 domination of Milton.

"Matt did a great job of putting the ball where we wanted it," said second year Cohasset head coach Dave Nigro. "He's just got great offensive instincts and touch."

In fact, the coach went even further in his praise of his two talented center-mids.

"Matt and Greg pretty much dominated the game," said Nigro. "It looks like that's going to be our strength this year, in the middle and up front."

This is a dramatic change from last year's Skippers team that reached the Southeast Sectional semifinals (where it lost to top seeded Norwell, 2-1) on the strength primarily of its defense.

But with most of the backliners from that squad lost to graduation and many of the key starters up front back for another go-round, the balance of power and experience had clearly shifted, making the altered approach a no-brainer to Nigro—a year round Club League soccer coach.

"Guys like O'Connell and Bilodeau and Baird all have a year under their belts, and it looks like

TIC golf tournament re-scheduled

It is not often that you get a second chance in this life, but here is one of those opportunities. The 24th annual Talking Information Center (TIC) Golf Tournament was rained out in mid-August and has been rescheduled for Tuesday, Sept. 25, at the beautiful Halifax Country Club. Halifax is a closed course, so this is a chance to play a course that is not generally open to the public.

Play begins at 12:30 p.m., and the day includes contests, prizes, silent auction, raffle and a steak dinner. Player entry fee is $125, hole sponsor fee is $175, and golf carts can be sponsored for $50.

TIC is a non-profit radio reading service broadcasting newspapers, magazines and books 24 hours a day, seven days a week to more than 20,000 visually impaired Massachusetts residents. To enter, sponsor or volunteer call TIC in Marshfield at 781-834-4400.

coach Tony Rolfe solemnly. "Liam was going to have a career year on both sides of the ball."

Despite the losses of Bolster and Martin (safety and cornerback, respectively), the secondary performed extremely well, with two first year starters recording interceptions. Sophomore Chris Bilodeau, who will replace Martin in both his cornerback and receiver responsibilities, and senior Eric Libby, a converted soccer player, had Cohasset's first picks of the year. The Skippers also recovered a fumble.

Cohasset's defense also shut down their hosts up front, with senior linebacker Paul Previte leading an attack that stopped a normally impressive Spellman running game cold. This was only the second shutout the Skippers have had under Rolfe's tenure as head coach.

"We are hoping the defense will just continue to get better and better," said Rolfe. "Any time you beat Cardinal Spellman is a good day."

On the offensive side of the ball, Rolfe was pleased with the adjustments of his first year running back and quarterback.

Senior Jason Brown—switching this season to tailback after starting the previous two years at quarterback—racked up 85 yards on 24 carries. Brown would have gone over the century mark in yards, but had one of his longer runs called back on a holding penalty.

The biggest surprise of the day was sophomore Michael Dooley at quarterback. He completed 10 of his 14 passes for 110 yards, including a seven yard touchdown strike to junior Tom Anderson.

"I gave him the game ball," beamed Rolfe. "Everyone had confidence in him from the get-go. He really kept his composure throughout the game."

Dooley was not expected to land in a starting role, but with junior Michael Snowdale day-to-day with a wrist injury, the sophomore stepped up.

Dooley had good protection from the newly retooled offensive line, consisting of seniors Jari Martin, Brendan Goff, and Will Prendegast (captain), junior Cosimo Cambi and sophomore Stephen Davis.

Although Rolfe is not one to make predictions about an entire season based on one outing, he was pleased at the launch pad this contest provided his team.

"It is a good start for us," he noted. "We are very pleased."

Liam Martin, seen here hauling in a pass in last November's Thanksgiving game, will be deeply missed for the remainder of this season by the Skippers. The senior captain broke his ankle in Saturday's season opening win over Cardinal Spellman.

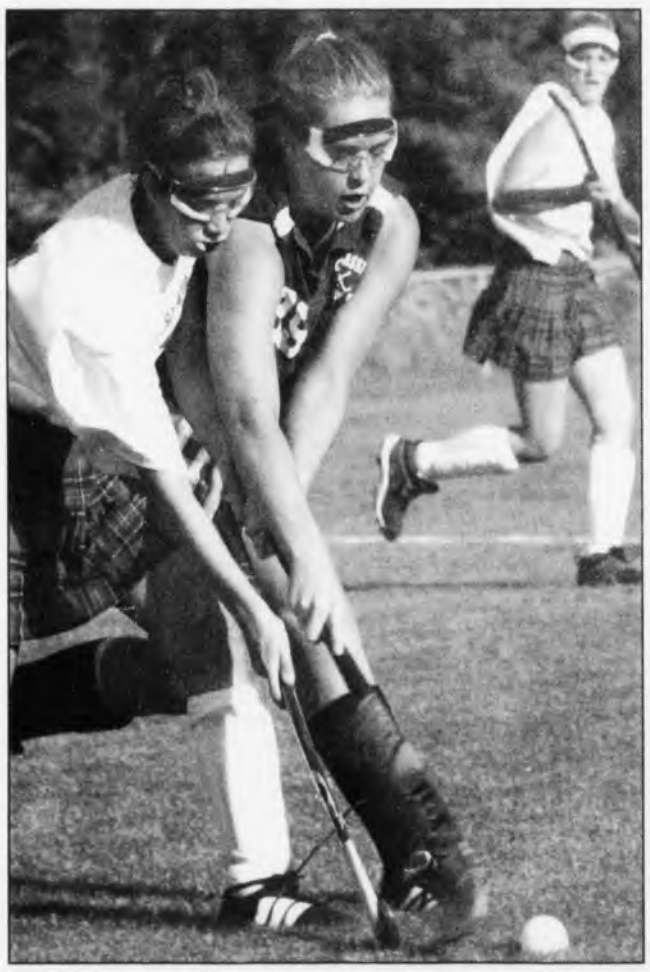
they've all worked hard to improve their soccer skills," said Nigro. "They're ready for a lot more responsibility this year."

Adding talented sophomores like Clark and Dave Santiago provide Nigro with the multi-pronged attack many feel can lift his team to the top of the always competitive SSL. And he's expecting even more depth to be added along the frontline by next week with the return from injury of Jay Bertovich and a waiver freeing Evan Pestone, a junior transfer from New Hampton, to play.

With four time defending champion Norwell decimated by graduation and perennial contender Hanover moving up in division to the Patriot League this year, the South Shore League does indeed appear to be there for the taking, and Nigro doesn't back away from those whispers.

"I don't think it's any secret," offered the coach matter-of-factly. "If we play up to our ability, I definitely think we can take the championship."

Soccer Notes



Both Cohasset varsity soccer teams were scheduled to play in Norwell Tuesday night, the girls at 5 p.m., the boys under the lights on the football field at 7 p.m.. However, because of the acts of terrorism perpetrated in New York and Washington D.C. earlier in the day, all extra-curricular activity was wisely postponed.

At the time of this writing, those games were slated to be made up Wednesday night.

For the girls, this game will be the season opener.

For the Cohasset boys, this game stands as a something of a watershed contest. It's been a few years since the Skippers have beaten Norwell, and last year they lost all three meetings (including the sectional semifinals) by a single goal. Although the Clippers have been stung by graduation and transfers, they are still considered a very sound team, and their 1-1 season opener against Scituate on Friday only lent further support to that assertion.

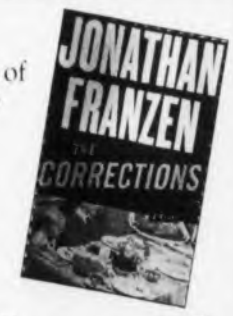
the defense in front of the net, with seniors Lynner and Jackie Goines leading the way.

"They were a little quicker than us on offense, but my defense is better than their defense," stated the Lady Skippers coach matter-of-factly.

In game number 2 on the season, Monday at East Bridgewater, Cohasset managed a 1-1 tie against another much larger Div. 1 team.

The Lady Vikings struck first, slipping a tap-in past Genovese with five minutes to play in the first half.

But the Skippers kept the ball in the offensive end for much of the second half, eventually scoring on their fourth corner of the game. The shot was set up when junior captain Heather Peraino slid her corner shot to Coakley, who made a thread-the-needle pass to senior forward Allison Scott through heavy traffic. Scott may have had the last touch on the ball before it scored, but it was junior Deanna Brown who ended the play with authority.



For the rest of the game, the Cohasset offense was noticeably slowed by senior sweeper Ryan Orcutt, the only male player Cohasset has seen in some time. His strength and high level of play warranted a pre-game phone call from the Viking coach to CHS Athletic Director Ron Ford, but Bostwick decided to play the game outright with no protest.

"He was their whole defense," noted Bostwick with a laugh. "He had good stick control, and a very powerful drive."

For the second straight game, Bostwick was very pleased with the defense. This time it was a pair of juniors stepping up in the absence of Goines. Sarah Dennis and Kimmy Ulmer, who both played the entire game at the fullback positions, were instrumental in cutting off EB's breakaways.

Little League tryouts

The Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association (CYBSA) has announced tryouts for the 2001 Major League baseball season will be held Sunday, Sept. 30, at 1 p.m. at Barnes Field on North Main Street. Youngsters who will be 10, 11 or 12 years old on or before July 31, 2002, and are not currently playing at the Major League level, are invited and encouraged to participate in this once-a-year tryout event.

All those who are eligible should plan to attend, as this is the only opportunity to tryout. Applications are available at Town Hall or can be completed upon arrival at Barnes Field. Participants are requested to arrive at 12:30 p.m. to facilitate the registration process. There is no money required for this exercise but each participant should bring a baseball glove, hat and long pants.

Fall baseball leagues start up

The South Shore Baseball Club's annual Fall Outdoor Baseball Leagues for players 7 to 18 in four different age groups, as well as its Rookie League for boys and girls 5-8 without experience in organized sports, swings into action in September.

More than 200 players participated in the SSBC Fall League last year. This season's five-week session is scheduled to run outdoors through Oct. 28.

"We have games, practices and quality instruction for everybody," SSBC president/director Frank Niles Jr. said. "Our leagues are designed for players who want to take advantage of New England's best baseball weather."

Ages 7-9: Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, 4 to 6 p.m., Sept. 10 to Oct. 12, at Negus Park in South Weymouth. Players enter individually and are placed on teams by the SSBC staff. Niles is the head instructor.

A true inspiration

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Mike McClendon rounded the final bend to pop into view of those of us standing near the finish line at Friday's cross country race showdown between Norwell and Hanover. Suddenly, the Norwell High harrier went into what can only be described as a prolonged stumble—his legs flailing behind him for eight to ten steps as his upper body slowly keeled forward. Gravity finally prevailed, as Mike crashed hard onto the rocky dirt path approximately 50 yards from the finish line.

It was at about this point it became all too clear this was not a mere trip. It was obvious something more was wrong as Mike flopped about on the ground, a vacant expression on his face. Within a few second, however, one of Norwell's assistant coaches was alongside him to help him up and direct him back towards the finish line.

"What was he doing?!" my mind screamed, as I wondered if there was any way this coach might not have noticed the distressing signs I witnessed. I mean the race was pretty much over at that point, with Hanover having taken the top four spots overall and their decisive fifth runner having crossed the line just moments before Mike became the eighth runner to appear.

The wild-eyed look Mike had as he approached the finish line with the same awkward gait he had before he went down the first time, quite frankly, raised my concern to downright fright. He hit down hard on his knees for the second time some 10 feet from the finish line. He then started crawling and rolling towards the line. With the help of the assistant coach and a paramedic, he finally managed to cross the line—whether or not his official placing of 10th counted, who knows...much less ,who cares.

The paramedic made the quick verbal observation that Mike had stopped sweating, which allowed even me to diagnose dehydration...but that didn't explain the far-away look in his eyes, did it?

I moved over next to one of the Norwell parents I'd been talking to earlier and asked "can dehydration do that?!"

"He's autistic," the parent told me, sensing instantly what I meant. "It just looks like he pushed himself too hard."

Ooooh....

Mike, a junior, is fine today. It was discovered at the hospital that, in addition to dehydration, his blood sugar was below normal limits. The doctors want to follow up on that, but Mike's mother reports that he should be cleared for competition before too much longer.

"Mike just loves to run," said Carol McClendon. "We're a little concerned about the blood sugar count, but once (doctors) make sure it's nothing serious, he should be back. It's tough to keep him from running."

Mike has been running year round at Norwell High since his freshman year. He lettered as a varsity team member in cross country, indoor and outdoor track last year after running for the JV squads his first year.

Norwell High coach Chuck Martin has been watching Mike's progress as a runner for even longer than that. In addition to coaching the N.H.S. track teams year round, Martin runs a summer running program for Norwell grade schoolers (a nice feeder system, eh coach?), and Mike first joined on at the age of 12. Martin also let him run with his high school squads as an eighth grader, helping the shy youngster get a jump start in his acclimation to high school life and athletics.

Today, he is flourishing on both fronts.

"Chuck (Martin) has just been an amazing with Mike," said Mrs. McClendon. "As a parent, I can't express my appreciation enough for all he's done."

Mike is one of the Norwell team's top two-milers in both the winter and spring seasons, and also appears to be one of the key harriers for the cross country squad this fall. He was on his way to an eighth place overall finish, and third best among Norwell runners, among 30 or so runners when he collapsed in Friday's season opener.

He ran his fifth Falmouth Road Race last month with his father, Richard, finishing with an outstanding time of 55:19.

Mike has also been playing youth hockey with the South Shore Seahawks since the age of seven. He currently plays center in the Midget division. Carol McClendon said the only thing stopping him from trying out for the Norwell High hockey team is his involvement in winter track.

In addition, he loves to swim and rollerblade.

Academically, Mike carries a full course load with some modifications. He reads and writes quite well, and takes regular high school level courses such as Math, English, Spanish and Marine Biology.

His verbal skills are a little behind those of most 16-year olds, which contributes to the shyness. That made talking to him for the purpose of this article difficult. It is reported, however, by people around whom he's comfortable, that he's quite capable of lighting up a room, or hallway or track facility.

"He'll walk across the room with a big smile on his face to shake your hand," said Norwell High Athletic Director Jim Sullivan. "Mike is just a super kid. You can't help smiling when you're around him. He's a real inspiration to anyone who knows him."

Principal Stephen Mahoney agrees.

"Norwell is a small enough school that everyone seems to know everyone, and people certainly know and like Mike," said Mahoney. "He really interacts well with a lot of the kids in the building, and I think he's an inspiration to us all."

Even Carol McClendon, who's around him every day, can't help but feel inspired by "Mikey's" continued growth as an athlete, but even more so a person.

"I think it's been pretty unbelievable for someone with Mike's disability to participate at the level he has," said Carol, who is also the mother of twin seventh grade boys, Andrew and Christopher. "I think he's an inspiration to parents of younger autistic children. We know a few through the inclusion program, and it's nice to think that Mike might help them feel better about what their kids are capable of."

Four-alarm fantasy

Firefighter blazing new trail in party business

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Pembroke resident Mike Watts is a hard-working man who enjoys the simpler things in life.

He owns a cozy house, has a loving wife, two wonderful daughters, a steady job as a firefighter in Weymouth and has his very own big red fire truck.

Watts, 34, recently purchased the de-commissioned 1976 model fire engine and plans to put it to use for parties, fundraisers and other functions as part of his new business — A Fire Truck for all Occasions.

"I just figured that every one has jumped around in moonwalks (big trampolines), everyone has seen the clowns, and everyone has taken the pony rides," he said. "But what person has ever had their own fire department for the day for something like a birthday party?"

Because Watts is an avid collector of firefighting-oriented antiques, he always has extra supplies on hand that he brings to functions like old hoses, nozzles, helmets, fire hydrants, models, and even a stuffed Dalmatian for a mascot. Watts said many people in Pembroke know of his love of collecting firefighting paraphernalia, and people around the town are always dropping off old collectibles at his door.

But all this did not happen overnight, and Watts said he never planned any of it.

After spending time in the Army, college, and then the Coast Guard, Watts decided to take a job at the now-defunct Weymouth Naval Air Base. When the base closed, Watts found himself out of a job, so he flew himself to Orlando, Florida where he landed a job as a firefighter.

Collecting fire equipment and memorabilia has become more than just a hobby for Pembroke's Mike Watts — it's part of his business.

"People love it. I already get paid for something I love to do, but the truck has added a new level of excitement to my life."
Weymouth Firefighter and business owner Mike Watts

"Ten months later, that base also closed," Watts recalled. But he said before he knew it, Weymouth Mayor David Madden, who was the fire chief in Weymouth at that time, offered him a job as a firefighter, so he and his family came back to the South Shore and settled in Pembroke.

One day, Watts' wife told him about a friend at work who had a little boy who loved the firefighting profession. Watts' wife said her friend was looking for something special to do for his birthday.

Watts swung into action and helped arrange a party for the boy at the Old Fire Museum in Easton and made the event even more special by bringing along accessories like fire helmets, boots and other equipment for the children to try on.

When a week later, a thank you note arrived from the grateful mom along with a check for $65, Watts' idea for a party planning business ignited.

STAFF PHOTOS/CHRIS BERNSTEIN

Firefighter and party planner Mike Watts shows off his 1976 fire engine. The decommissioned truck is the hit at a host of functions.

"It surprised me, because I never wanted any money for it," Watts said of the thank you payment. "But I started thinking that maybe I could do functions as a part-time job."

Before getting all fired up about the plan, Watts pitched the concept to people all over Pembroke — asking parents and other individuals what they thought of the firefighting-birthday concept. As more and more people became receptive to the idea, Watts decided to give it a go.

It wasn't long before he determined there should be more to the parties than hats, hoses and boots. Watts wanted his own fire truck to bring along, too.

"I started researching that possibility about three or four months ago," Watts said. "Eventually, I found this company in New York that sells fire trucks." Watts was told that there was one for sale at that facility so his vision kept getting close to reality.

"When I finally told my wife about it, she thought I was crazy." Watts said. But she agreed because she thought his concept was a great idea.

It was also an expensive idea, and with no extra spending cash available, Watts was forced to make a sizable sacrifice —he sold his beloved motorcycle. With the money from that and from another loan he took out, Watts and his wife went to New York and bought the truck.

The trip home was a tough one as the engine broke down twice on the way back from New York —once in the Bronx and once in Connecticut. But it turned out it was a big "engine that could" and the truck arrived on the South Shore about a month ago. Watts said the truck is now running just fine, and since he's been back, kids in his neighborhood and his own daughters are enthralled with it. He said he keeps the engine stored at the Bare Cove Fire Museum in Hingham, but he frequently brings it out for a little show and tell.

A large number of party requests has Watts fine tuning his function offerings. He offers three separate party packages which include an array of activities like fire-related games, truck demonstrations, and fire-prevention lessons.

"People love it," Watts said. "I already get paid for something I love to do, but the truck has added a new level of excitement to my life. It's just a great time. And it all just kind of happened."

With the fire truck business off and running, Watts is already moving on to another important project, he said.

"I've got to get another motorcycle as soon as possible."

For more information on scheduling and pricing for A Fire Truck for all Occasions call Watts at (781) 293-2900. Watt' business is available for birthday parties, weddings, surprise visits, graduations, business grand openings and other functions.

Starship lands at Vincent's

60s rock icons perform at Randolph club September 19

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The band is currently semi-reformed as Jefferson Starship, but there would have never been a Starship without the original Jefferson Airplane. And there never would have been an Airplane as we know it without the band's landmark, breakthrough album — Surrealistic Pillow.

That mid 60s LP classic is now 35 years old, and is one of the essential and defining rock albums of its day for good reason. Fusing the Airplane's bohemian folk-music roots with the era's wild anticipation of electric, psychedelic-inspired musical adventures to come, "Pillow," within months of its release became one of the flagship albums of 1967s youth counterculture explosion often fuzzily remembered as the "Summer of Love," taking its indelible place among such elite LP company as the Beatles' Sgt. Pepper's, the Hendrix Experience's Are You Experienced? and the Doors' first album. It was also the Airplane's first album on which original members Marty Balin, Paul Kantner, Jorma Kaukonen and Jack Cassidy were joined by alluring new vocalist Grace Slick, whose two songs "Somebody To Love" and "White Rabbit" became instant crossover anthems with enough staying power to land in the regular rotations of classic-rock and oldies radio stations clear into the next century.

Jefferson Starship, reunited since 1992 with singers/guitarists Balin and Kantner and other artistically like-minded musicians/friends, has rocked on gracefully through the past decade, lighting up the national club, arena and festival scene with regular periodic tours that not only trade nobly on the band's legendary Airplane/Starship past but even attempt to expand on it as well.

In celebrating the Pillow album's silver-plus-ten anniversary, Starship's current summer-fall trek carries this added interest for long-time fans, and will be the main focus as the show flies into Vincent's, off Route 228, Randolph, to debut this fall's Wednesdays Rock! classic-rock concert series this week. The band's current stretch of shows is spotlighting the Pillow album in its entirety plus numerous other pickings from the vast three-decade Airplane/Starship catalog.

Jefferson Starship kicks off Vincent's in Randolph's "Wednesdays Rock" series Sept. 19.

"(Surrealistic Pillow) was the album that really got us attention back in the early days," said Kantner by phone from his hotel room just before a recent weekend show in Cerritos, CA. "No one could have predicted at the time just how popular or how much of an icon the album would become. We certainly thought we had a solid collection of songs, and most of the best material to showcase our new style with Grace (Slick) coming on for the first time. And for some reason, the album just struck a chord with our listeners, and brought us a whole lot of new ones as well."

"Music is such an unpredictable thing. No one can really touch upon why it works or it doesn't, or creates such a buzz in its time and either has or doesn't have a lasting effect after that. It's really like a luck of the draw sometimes. You put your music out there and hope for the best," Kantner said.

Kantner, now 60, was, along with Balin and Slick, part of the song-oriented creative force of the Airplane's overall vision back in its heyday, as opposed to the more expansive jam and improvisation tendencies of singer/guitarist Kaukonen and bassist Cassidy. As the band not only mirrored but helped galvanize the musical experimentation of its times, these collective creative personalities became ever more assertive and near uncontainable, an artistic Airplane of all pilots and no crew, as evidenced by such wildly "trippy" subsequent albums as After Bathing At Baxter's, Crown of Creation and the outspokenly political Volunteers.

Pillow in its time found the Airplane still mainly a song-oriented band. Kantner's songwriting efforts on the album include the gracefully psychedelic "D.C.B.A. - 25" and a collaboration with Balin, the emotive, mystical ballad "Today." Other Balin-vocal signatures such as "My Best Friend" and "Plastic Fantastic Lover" also highlight an album that is especially notable for every song being distinctive.

"The kind of experimentation we (the Airplane) did back then was simply the spirit of the times. All the members had incredible creative ideas and energy and went off in different directions. There were certainly musical and personal conflicts but I think we managed to hold it together for a long time as a band," Kantner said.

The current Jefferson Starship features vocalist/frontperson Diana Mangano, who by reports has quite capably stepped into the rather imposing role of Grace Slick onstage. "A very embracing, powerful vocalist. I met her in upstate New York," Kantner said. Also, the band includes ex-Tubes drummer Prairie Prince, guitarist Slick Aguilar, formerly of David Crosby's band, and keyboardist/bassist Chris Smith, also an industry veteran.

Recalling the spirit of what made the Airplane the sort of flag-flying hippie band it was in its time, Kantner cites perhaps an unlikely main influence.

"I always looked to Pete Seeger and the Weavers for inspiration of how to perform onstage. They sort of showed us how to essentially be a band and play to an audience. And to take serious concerns that are political, social or otherwise and still have fun with them in front of a crowd. I give a lot of credit for who we were to Pete and his original band," Kantner said.

The new Jefferson Starship has two newly released live multiple-CD sets covering shows recorded in New York and Florida last fall. They are both exclusively available by mail or internet order on the band's website at www.jeffersonstarshipSF.com.

For tickets and information on the Wednesday, Sept. 19 show at Vincent's in Randolph, call (866) 468-7619. Tickets for the Wednesdays Rock series are also available at local Strawberries Records and Tapes.

Twin folk singers have date at Hingham coffeehouse

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

They are the Thompson twins.

No relation to the new wave '80s group that brought us "Hold me now," these Thompson twins —sisters Chris and Meredith — started playing together in the early 1990s and folk music is their forte. The Rhode Island natives have received a lot of critical acclaim and a local following. In addition to being nominated for best folk act in Rhode Island, the pair were finalists at the South Florida Folk Festival and last year won the Boston-based Band and Songwriter contest. They'll make a South Shore appearance this weekend with a Saturday night concert at the Old Ship Coffeehouse in Hingham Square.

The small coffeehouse venue is a favorite for the Thompsons and they're looking forward to bringing their silky-smooth style of music to the South Shore.

"What we play is acoustic music grounded in the folk tradition," Chris said. "But we have a lot of Celtic, Latin, and Cuban influences in our music. We are also influenced by American folk." Chris said she and her sister love playing folk particularly because "it is music that tells a story." With Chris playing guitar, Meredith on flute and congas, and both women on vocals, the stories are told over a beautiful wall of choral sound.

The Thompsons have many stories to tell, and that's why they now have four albums out, the most recent — a live record. Their most recent studio album is called "Wood and Stone," released in 1999.

"Each of our songs has a specific story, and they have universal themes," Chris said. "The songs are a celebration of life that recognize people's strengths."

And those very songs have built up quite a following since the Thompsons' first album called "Ithaca" came out in 1996.

Rethinking corn soup

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

Corn soup and corn chowder are only worth making for a few weeks out of the year, when corn is so fresh and plentiful that one gets tired of simply eating it freshly boiled on the cob. But I am no fan of complicated recipes for corn soup since the very essence of corn is no-nonsense simplicity. My goal, therefore, was to pare this recipe down to its bones and then add in a flavor or two to make it more than a bowlful of cooked, pureed kernels.

In the past, I have authored corn soup recipes that require the cook to "milk" the corn which means to remove the contents of the kernel, leaving behind the outer shell. This is done with a corn "stripper," a foot-long metal trough with sharp blades that cuts open the kernels as one slides the cob down the chute. The other method is to use a sharp knife to slice the kernels and then the back of the knife is used to press out the contents. To simplify the process, I decided instead to use whole kernels that are pulsed in a food processor. Yes, the texture is coarser, but the time savings were worth it.

Next, I had to decide between a chowder and a soup. The former includes diced potatoes, the latter doesn't. Having tried the recipe both ways, I found that the potatoes were an unwelcome complication – they need to be washed and diced and their texture and flavor simply competed with the corn. So, soup it was.

Now I had a simple working recipe: corn kernels, diced onion, half and half, chicken stock, salt and pepper. I sautéed the corn in a bit of butter with the onion, added the half and half, and then puréed the mixture in a food processor. This mixture was placed back in the pan, chicken stock was added, and the soup was simmered. It was good but I wanted to make the recipe a bit more interesting. I added some diced ginger along with the onion and this made for a nice pairing. Finally, to give the broth more depth, I added one cup of coconut milk. This was too much so I stepped it back to 3/4 cup which was just right. A final garnish with snipped chives added color and a fresh accent.

The whole recipe can be made in less than half an hour and it is special enough to serve either mid-week or at a fancy dinner party.

CORN SOUP WITH COCONUT MILK AND GINGER

There is a lot of confusion about coconut milk, coconut cream, and cream of coconut. The latter, cream of coconut, is a sweetened product which is used primarily for making drinks – it contains thickeners and emulsifiers. Coconut milk and coconut cream are made by steeping coconut milk in either water or milk. These are unsweetened products and are somewhat interchangeable in terms of commercial nomenclature. I use Thai Kitchen Pure Coconut Milk which is available in supermarkets nationwide. An easy way to mince chives is simply to snip them with scissors. If you have a corn stripper and are inclined to use it, milk the corn kernels instead of using them whole. You will need about a dozen ears to produce 4 cups.

2 tablespoons butter
4 cups corn kernels (from about 6 large ears)
1 cup diced onion
2 teaspoons minced ginger
1 cup half and half
3/4 cup coconut milk or cream (NOT cream of coconut)
3 cups chicken stock
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
1/4 cup snipped or minced chives

1. Heat a 12-inch skillet or large saucepan over high heat for 2 minutes. Add butter. When melted, add corn kernels, onion, and ginger and sauté over medium-high heat for 4 minutes, stirring frequently. Add half and half and coconut milk and simmer for 10 minutes. Purée mixture in a blender or food processor until smooth.

2. Rinse out pan and return mixture to it. Add chicken stock, bring back to a simmer, and cook gently for 3 minutes. Add salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste. Garnish with chives and serve. Serves 6 to 8 as a first course.

The Thompsons recalled how it all started.

Chris said before the two sisters went off to Cornell University, they were playing at open-mic nights at a Providence establishment called Stone Soup.

"From there, we both went to Cornell and we decided to play together full-time," Chris said. By 1996, both sisters graduated from Cornell and decided to start their recording career.

When writing songs, the sisters found their talents were in specific areas—Chris was good at writing music and Meredith, a poet, was excellent with lyrics.

"You can't really smush a poem into a song," Meredith said, "you have to write lyrics. Poems and songs are two separate things."

The Thompsons found by creating a simple guitar riff and a tranquil flute line, combined with soulful singing, bass, and congas, they could write great tunes.

"We always use different levels of sound when we play," Chris said. "Sometimes songs sound better if they are simple because they can be simple and powerful at the same time. We like creating soundscapes of audio imagery."

"I get the stories behind the songs by looking at neat things that are going on or at things that have already happened," Meredith added. "We like stories that need to be told and re-told. It's amazing what kinds of stories you can hear when you talk to people."

These days, the Thompsons are no longer strangers to the music business. They've traveled all over the country playing shows, released albums, got awards and received praise from critics. After all of their hard work over the years, they are still having fun.

"We'd like to start recording another album soon," Chris said. "We have enough material for it." Meanwhile, while they wait to record their new record, they are always finding new stories to write about.

"A lot of people in the industry write about things that have happened to them," Chris added. "We always try to step out of that by finding people who have stories of their own to tell. We just try to do things a little bit differently."

Chris said at the show in Hingham, she and Meredith will be playing songs from all of their albums.

"I think it's going to be a lot of fun," Meredith said. "It's always such a thrill to perform."

"We just hope people who come to the show will find the music uplifting," Chris added. "I want people to respond to our songs by saying 'I've felt like that' or 'Hey, I've made a decision like that.' But the best part is always playing live in front of an audience that's excited."

The Thompsons' Sept. 15 show at the Old Ship Coffeehouse starts at 8 p.m. For ticket information call (617) 623-1509 or log onto www.cmthompson.com.

Singing sisters Meredith and Chris Thompson will perform at Hingham's Old Ship Church coffeehouse Sept. 15.

Prioritize your fall landscape projects

Green thumbs up

Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDANT

PART I

There is a touch of fall in the air as the last, unofficial weekend of the summer season comes to a close. The month of September is often the best month of the year to perform a wide range of gardening and landscape projects. Springtime in New England poses many challenges for sowing, growing and planting due to unpredictable weather conditions, cold, soggy soils and a lengthy checklist of gardening chores. The warm days and cool evenings of this month offer an ideal opportunity to get a head start on many of these landscaping activities and fall is generally considered the preferred time of year to renovate lawns, transplant perennials and prepare new gardens.

Take time this month, with notebook in hand, to stroll your grounds and critically view and analyze your lawn, gardens and shrubbery. A mature landscape may require considerable time and notations to specify those trees and shrubs which require pruning, transplanting or perhaps elimination. Jot down attractive plant combinations in your containers and borders and do headcounts on successful plantings of annuals you may wish to repeat next season. List changes to be made and open spaces which may need to be filled in this fall or next spring. Should time be an issue, take photos to document your container gardens and plantings and to remind yourself of the mature size of your perennials at season's end, a factor which many of us fail to recall during the spring planting season when there appears to be so much empty space between the plants in our borders.

Visit your local nursery for a wide assortment of fall-blooming perennials, decorative kale and cabbage, chrysanthemums, asters, sedums and ornamental grasses. Spring-flowering bulbs are beginning to arrive and although there is no immediate hurry to plant these harbingers of spring, shop early for the best selection.

Early September is the preferred time of year to install or renovate lawns. Warm soil temperatures facilitate the prompt germination of grass seed and Mother Nature usually assists with the important task of regular watering. Removal of weeds and crabgrass, either by hand or with the aid of selective herbicides, is usually recommended prior to undertaking any lawn project. In weedy areas which have very few grass plants, a broad spectrum herbicide, such as Roundup or Finale, which kills even the existing grass, may be the best course of action. If chemicals are used, be sure to read the label carefully to note the length of time required for the herbicide to dissipate prior to seeding.

For established lawns, a vigorous raking should remove light thatch, but a large or neglected lawn may require heavier equipment to remove a dense layer of dead grass plants which have become matted and reduce the ability of the surviving grass plants to secure moisture and nutrients. Once this process is complete, overseed, apply lime and a starter fertilizer and water regularly.

Aerating the soil at this time of year will also produce a significant improvement in your lawn's uptake of moisture and nutrients. This is particularly important for areas which may have become compacted by heavy foot traffic or cars and for lawns planted over heavy soils. An aerator which pulls small, round plugs of soil out of the ground is the most effective and is best employed when the lawn is damp. The unsightly plugs can be raked up and used to fill low spots or shredded with a rotary mower once they are dry.

For new lawn, at least 4 inches of good loam should be present to grow healthy grass plants and 6 inches or more is preferred. Select grass seed mixtures appropriate for your light exposure and your anticipated usage of the area. There are formulas for sun or shade, mixtures which produce-picture perfect lawns if they receive little traffic, or blends which provide a tough, resilient turf which can withstand considerable trampling. Inexpensive seed mixtures are rarely worth the time and effort it takes to spread them as the percentage of inert material or "other seed" can result in a sparse, weedy lawn that has to be re-seeded in the spring. Read the labels.

Newly seeded areas should be watered lightly several times a day, if possible, to keep the soil moist without allowing large puddles to form which will cause the seed to float into low spots. Once a large percentage of the seed has sprouted, then longer periods of watering every few days are suggested. Early seeding will promote a sturdier turf which will better withstand the unpredictability of our New England winter.

As the days grow shorter, the seed heads of annuals and perennials (and weeds) ripen rapidly. Many of these seeds will successfully germinate if left to their own devices but they always seem to reappear in the most inopportune places, usually at the front of the border. Collect and disperse seeds where you would like them to grow next season or dry and store them in plastic bags or envelopes in cool, dark environments to sow next spring. If time does not permit removal of weeds, cut off and dispose of the seed heads until the intruders can be extricated by their roots. A little weeding at this time of year may save hours of valuable time next season.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, SEPT. 13

Storm clouds move in today. Wake up in a good mood. The Cancer moon is inactive until 3:16 p.m. Others may be moody, hypersensitive. Zero in on odd jobs, clean out and reorganize. Get your home or work area spic and span. Influences lighten up at 3:16 p.m., when the moon enters playful Leo. However, an applying opposition of Venus/Uranus warns you to expect the unexpected, particularly in relationships. Don't force issues; give others lots of space. On the other hand, the evening is prime for fun and games. Be more adventurous; go with your wild side.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 14

Fair and sunny astrological weather returns. Influences today rate high across the board. If you are working, you can be most productive. New starts are recommended, particularly before 3:27 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn. Put on your party hat and let the good times roll this evening.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 15

Take extra time out for yourself this morning; relax and enjoy favorite leisure activities. At 4:35 a.m. the Leo moon forms its last major contact to a planet and becomes inactive. The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 3:39 p.m., when the moon enters Virgo. Curl up with a good book or catch up on study or work projects this evening.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 16

The dark side of a new moon is in full force and effect today. Your attitude will make all the difference. Don't get caught up in worries, self-doubts, anger. Let go of situations you have no control over. Stay busy with practical projects; tackle jobs you've been putting off and get them out of the way. The Virgo moon forms challenging 90-degree alignments to Pluto at 11:42 a.m. and Saturn at 3:08 p.m.

MONDAY, SEPT. 17

At 6:27 a.m. the new moon culminates, when the sun and moon align at 25-degrees of Virgo. At this time the moon becomes inactive until 3:00 p.m., when it enters Libra. A harmonious alignment of Mercury and Uranus makes this period prime for troubleshooting, problem-solving. You can work out the glitches and find new solutions to old problems. The most favorable period for initiating new ventures occurs between 3:00-9:49 p.m. A lunar alignment to Mars at 10:58 p.m. may spark romantic fireworks this evening.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 18

A Libra moon generates an upbeat mood today and tomorrow. New starts across the board are recommended. Relationship issues may take precedence. Influences are prime for meeting people, establishing new alliances. If you have been experiencing problems with another, this is the time to clear the air and work out a compromise. Seek a creative or romantic outlet for your energies this evening.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 19

Yesterday's planetary influences are in effect today until 12:38 p.m. At this time the Libra moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive. Be sure to start new activities before 12:38 p.m. The moon enters Scorpio at 3:27 p.m., bringing a change of pace and priorities. Plan a quiet evening. Meditate for peace of mind.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 20

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full work agenda today. You can be most productive. It is okay to start new activities before 1:03 p.m., when the Scorpio moon forms a harmonious contact to Jupiter. Tackle jobs that need repair, research, study. You can gain key insights and find important solutions. Venus enters Virgo at 10:09 p.m., remaining there until October 15.

WORSHIP

'Darkness came over the whole land...'

By the Rev. E. Clifford Cutler
ST. STEPHEN CHURCH

"Darkness came over the whole land..." — this is how Matthew described Jesus' death. They are words that come to mind as I sit to write this word to you only moments after terrorist planes were flown into the twin towers of the World Trade Center in New York and the Pentagon in Washington. Like many of you we at church stopped for prayer, we have opened wide the doors of the church for others in town to come in; we have called parishioners and family to see that they were all right while at the same time mourning the terrible loss of life. We are all near tears. We are embittered, enraged, horrified, in shock. Such an act of terrorism may call into question all the truths of our conventional understanding of God. Why do the innocent suffer and die? Where is God when something like this happens? How does one respond to evil? These questions force us to take our faith to a deeper level.

In stark contrast to this morning's terrorism, a Palestinian Anglican priest commented recently, "there is now a new intention of trying to intensify a movement of nonviolence. This is the way Jesus lived and behaved, so we've been doing some reflection on the life of Jesus and nonviolence with our community... There are Muslims and Jews who are participating in (this nonviolent) movement." There are other, destructive forces arrayed against nonviolence because it takes power out of the hands of militant leaders and puts it into the hands of people who want peace and justice.

Faith declares unequivocally that life is stronger than death. After the darkness that covered the land came the dawning of the first day of the week, an empty tomb and an angel whose appearance was like lightening — "Jesus who was crucified has been raised!" We are to trust life, trust the compassion that Jesus showed, and know that nothing (no terrorism) can come between us.

Jesus was no stranger to terrorism. In the year of his birth the Roman armies swept through the countryside destroying everything in sight. Whole villages were laid waste. Those suspected of colluding against Rome were put to death on crosses, some 2,000 were crucified at one time outside the walls of Jerusalem. Crucifixion would be the bookends of Jesus' life. But in between what compassion he would show. It has changed the world. He is our Person of Sorrows, our Great Companion who understands. He stands for compassion, peace, constant union, life eternal.

A Welsh Anglican bishop once offered a prayer at a time of disaster that went like this: "O Lord Jesus, whose heart was pierced with a spear and by your love left open for all to enter in: bring us to your heart in the hour of trouble, and hold us there forever." Amen.

Students' Mass at St. Anthony's

High school volunteers should contact Bill Coleman or Nick Anderson at 781-383-2503. All other volunteers should contact Rose Kierce at 781-383-0578.

A mandatory meeting for grade 9 Confirmation candidates and their parents will be held Sunday, Sept. 16 from 7-8:15 p.m. at the Parish Center.

New baby items will be collected at a parish baby shower the weekend of Oct. 21 to benefit Friends of the Unborn and Pregnancy Help, two crisis pregnancy centers. The event is sponsored by the parish Respect Life Committee, which holds a pro-life rosary every Friday at 7:30 a.m. and again at 9 a.m. in the church.

Storyteller and author Matthew Kelly will discuss how to improve your physical, emotional, intellectual and spiritual lifestyle on Friday, Oct. 26 at 7:30 p.m. at St. Anthony Parish, 10 Summer St.

Kelly, 28, of Australia, has spoken internationally on how to solve the problems that our lifestyles can pose. His book, "The Rhythm of Life," focuses on the importance of what you become, rather than what you do or possess. For directions, call 781-383-0219.

Town comes together at ecumenical service

In God We Trust.

That phrase, so familiar to all Americans, rang true for the nearly 1000 residents who packed St. Anthony's Church for a town-wide ecumenical service to share their feelings patriotism and personal faith Sunday.

"Our hearts are full of sadness and mourning."
— The Rev. John R. Mulvehill

The beautiful, cool late summer evening drew all ages. Some came in shorts and T-shirts or golf shirts, as if they'd just put down a rake and left their backyards, others wore suits and ties or dresses and heels, while still others sported red-white and blue ribbons or went into their closets for attire on any other occasion would be saved for the Fourth of July.

The range of dress nearly matched the myriad emotions that Cohasseters and their counterparts across the state, nation and the world were feeling less than a week after the deadly terrorist attack on New York City and Washington, D.C.

But sitting in St. Anthony's with their friends and neighbors guided by clergy from all the houses of worship in town – helped many come to grips with the tragic events of Sept. 11,

Cohasset copes with tragedy, through aid efforts, support

By Rick Collins

"It's good to play a part in any little way, knowing that the gloves I dropped off will help some worker digging through the rubble."
— Christine Fitzgerald, organizer of clothing, food drive

With the images of last Tuesday's tragedy still vivid in many minds, the town of Cohasset has helped the healing process by joining the national relief effort.

The Town Hall Auditorium became a drop-off site for a canned food and clothing drive, and other efforts are being planned at the town's schools.

"It's good to play a part in any little way," said Christine Fitzgerald, who organized the town hall-sponsored effort. "Knowing that the gloves I dropped off will help some worker digging through the rubble."

In order to help spread the word, Fitzgerald, who is the administrative assistant to Town Manager Mark Haddad, was able to get Stop & Shop and Shaw's supermarkets to announce the drive over the stores' public announcement system. A US flag was donated by Selectman Michael Sullivan to hang on town hall.

As of Tuesday night, Fitzgerald said residents have dropped off water, peanut-butter and jelly, an assortment of canned foods, work gloves, socks, jeans, and sweat-

Local EMT helps at Ground Zero

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Although the smell of burning jet fuel and acetylene torches used to cut through steel will stay with him for a while – the memories of "Ground Zero" in lower Manhattan will last a lifetime.

"I even put after-shave under my nose to get rid of the smell of the burning fuel," says Rich Bonanno, a local emergency medical technician, who helped at the scene. But, he's quick to point out, the inconvenience is miniscule compared to the ongoing nightmare in New York City.

Yet amidst all the tragedy, Bonanno says, is a tale of volunteerism and self-sacrifice evidenced by the hundreds and now thousands, rushing to the scene of the worst terrorist attack anywhere, ever.

Bonanno, an EMT who is a practical instructor at Eastern Medical Education in Hanover, was at Pat's barbershop in Cohasset Village getting a haircut when someone ran in and yelled to turn on the television because a plane had just hit the World Trade Center.

"We were glued to the TV when the second plane hit," Bonanno recalls. "Then I went home and saw the whole series of events unravel before my eyes."

But the Scituate resident couldn't just sit there – like countless thousands across the country, he wanted to do something.

Sept. 11 was the first of three days he would have off work in a row. By the next day, Bonanno had seen enough. "I couldn't stand it and as an EMT, I wanted to do something – so I told my wife I was going to go."

Bonanno took his two medical bags and left for the Amtrak station in Dedham where it was obvious where he was headed. The conductor told him to "use the ticket for the ride home."

"I couldn't stand it and as an EMT, I wanted to do something – so I told my wife I was going to go."
— Rich Bonanno

The train got as far as Providence where the FBI and other federal and state law enforcement officers boarded with their guns drawn to detain two men — a process that took two hours while the remaining passengers had to remain on the train.

Once at Penn Station in New York City, Bonanno met up with a nurse and a firefighter/paramedic. They decided to stay together and took the train to St. Vincent's Hospital. Once there, officials directed the nurse to help at the morgue and Bonanno and the paramedic were put in a vehicle that took them to the scene.

It was now 7 p.m., Wednesday. There was no power – only the very bright lights and smoke emerging from where the twin tow-

Thousands line up for Old Glory

Patriotic spirit is widespread

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

One result from last week's horrific terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon has been a tidal wave of patriotism.

Store signs boast "United We Stand," and "God Bless America," on their marquees. "America the Beautiful," and the national anthem have received frequent airplay on radio stations. And American flags have popped up on cars, trucks and homes in numbers unseen since the beginning of the Gulf War in 1991.

As a result, Norfolk Road's Nancy St. John, owner of Eagle Flag of America, says business has never been better — unfortunately.

"This is very bittersweet," she said Monday night, hours after selling every American flag and flag-related piece of paraphernalia her Weymouth store had.

St. John said since last Tuesday afternoon, when America was stunned by the tragic events that unfolded in front of their eyes, her small store at the foot of Fore River Bridge has sold "thousands and thousands" of flags.

"On that first day, when it first happening, I was just so off-balance, I didn't know how I felt," she said.

Thermal imaging camera arrives

Cohasset call firefighters presented the town with its new thermal imaging camera at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting.

The $20,800 camera, which registers different levels of heat, will aid the Cohasset Fire Department in rescue efforts, as well as locating fires behind walls. The call firefighters had recently engaged in a large fund-raising effort to purchase the camera, and raised more than $21,000.

"We hope we never have to use it," call firefighter Bruce Pratt said to the board.

The camera comes with rechargeable batteries good for up to three hours, and also a transmitter and receiver that allows the images to be transmitted to a small screen on a fire truck at the scene of an incident.

The board voted to unanimously accept the gift on behalf of the town and thanked the call firefighters for their efforts.

Dispatcher position

David Weeks has announced his resignation as a civilian dispatcher for the Cohasset Police Department.

"He was a fine employee and will be missed," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "He was a fine employee."

Haddad told selectmen that the department is currently interviewing candidates to replace Weeks.

Old Osgood play park to be razed

Town Manager Mark Haddad asked selectmen for permission to have the Department of Public Works tear down the playground at the old Osgood School on Ripley Road, because of safety concerns.

"I just want to take it down," he told the board. "We've had the police tape up there, but people just keep ripping it down."

Haddad said the playground would come down once construction began on converting the former school into the new town library. A children's "discovery center" is also planned for the rear wing.

Selectman Merle Brown hesitated on giving his approval because the cost of overtime and disposing of the materials.

But Selectman Thomas Callahan argued "if it's a hazard, it costs more to keep it up."

Selectman asked Haddad to find out how much it would cost to tear it down, and to also ask the organizers of the discovery center for any assistance.

Board vacancies

Selectman accepted the resignation of Mary Londergan from the Elder Affairs Board, and announced their is now a vacancy on the committee.

Also, Selectman Chairman Fred Koed announced their is one vacancy on the town Design & Review Board, and seven on the town Government Structure Committee.

Tree committee

Selectmen voted to recognize a town tree advisory committee Tuesday to review any planned tree plantings in town soil.

The Garden Club of Cohasset made the proposal after becoming upset that the town had planted four "invasive" Norway maples on the town common this spring.

Phyllis Peck, chairman of the club's tree committee, said non-native species, such as Norway maples, crowd out native species by monopolizing water, food and sunlight. The committee offered to replace the trees on Cohasset Common with more "underutilized," species, that are green-leafed, deciduous, and "appropriate for a colonial common."

Selectman Merle Brown said not only does the town plant the wrong type of trees, but also in the wrong places, mentioning the number of memorial trees in the quad at the middle/high school that are being protected from the ongoing construction project.

"I think it's great. It's something I've wanted to happen for a long time," he said.

The board voted to accept the club's gifts of four new trees for the common, as well as to form an official tree advisory committee to work with Tree Warden Andy Swanson. It also asked the committee to see if the other two garden clubs in town would be interested in forming a tri-club committee.

New Route 3A Cohasset police station recommended

Barry donates two acres for station

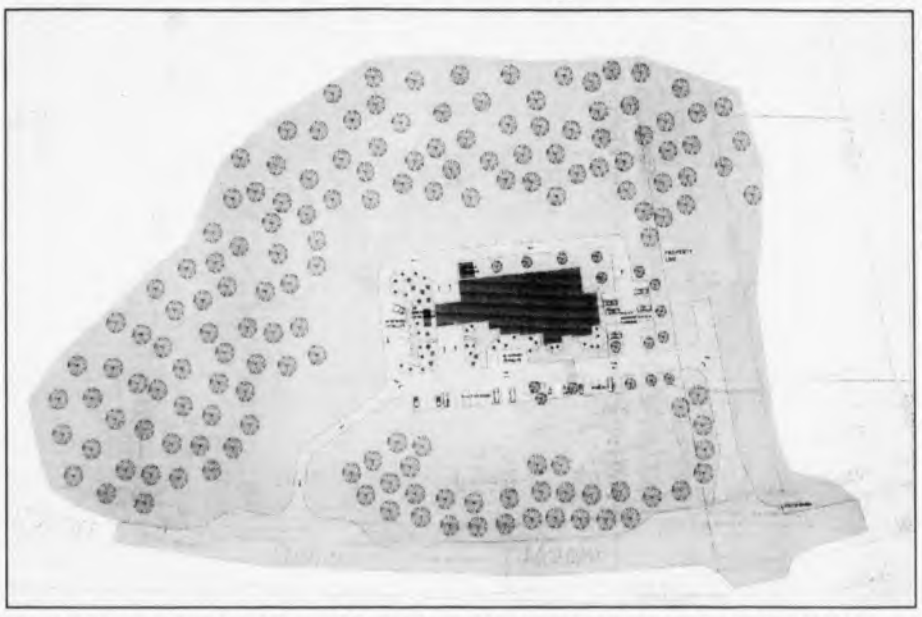
By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Police/Fire Station Study Committee has recommended separating the two public safety departments and constructing a new 11,000 square foot, multi-million dollar police headquarters off Route 3A

Committee chairman George McGoldrick also told selectmen Tuesday that Cohasset businessman Paul Barry has offered to give the town two acres of land across from the Upper King Street intersection with Route 3A for construction of the station.

"It would save the town almost a half-million dollars," McGoldrick said about the donation.

The committee has been meeting for more than a year, amidst complaints that the town fire and police departments have outgrown their currently shared building on Elm Street.



"The men and women of the Cohasset Police Department need and deserve a new facility," Police Chief Brian Noonan told selectmen.

Noonan brought with him a collage of photographs showing the cramped conditions inside the 4,200 square foot facility built in 1962.

He said when constructed, the station originally housed 10 full-time patrol officers, plus the chief. Now, it houses 18 full-time officers, a chief, five civilian dispatchers, a secretary, an animal control officer, and two seasonal police officers.

"In 1962, not only was there no detectives, but there was no safety officer, no school resource officer, no animal control officer, and most importantly, there was no police prosecutor," Noonan added. "We find ourselves attempting to allocate space that is not there."

Noonan said the two detectives share a 5-foot by 10-foot equipment room that also houses equipment for the 911 system; the four sergeants, prosecutor, and secretary share a 10-foot by 12-foot room, and the safety officer and school resource officer share a room in the cellar.

The site of the proposed police station is off Route 3A across from lower King Street near Sunrise Assisted Living.

"The building is structurally sound, but the department's needs have totally outgrown the building," he said.

The new police headquarters would be one floor, and could provide up to 15,000 square feet of space for the department. It would include a secured area for dispatchers, as well as separate space for the different officers and detectives, meeting rooms, an eating area, exercise space and separate locker rooms for men and women. It would also have a separately secured area containing a search room, booking room, four cells for male prisoners, once each for juvenile and female prisoners, and a holding tank for mass arrests.

The building's architect, Allen Lieb, said the size of the building is based upon the department's needs, the size of the town, and projected growth over the next 30 years. The floor plan presented to selectmen was for a 15,000 square foot station, but said eliminating one of the community rooms, the impound garage and combining the eating area and squad room, could cut nearly 4,000 square feet off the size.

Lieb added that the floor plan is still subject to further discussion about areas that can be condensed, according to departmental need.

He said certain aspects of the new building is dictated by state code, and others from safety concerns.

"Right now you book prisoners a few feet away from your computer equipment. If someone is messed up on drugs, with a few good kicks he could wipe out your entire emergency dispatch system," Lieb said.

The town is also required to either provide an exercise facility in house, or provide their police officers with fitness club memberships. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town currently spends $2,500 a year sending Cohasset officers to a local health club.

The committee estimated that, depending on the size, the station could cost upwards of $4 million, including design fees, and environmental work.

"We're hoping $4 million is a worst-case scenario," Haddad said.

The project wouldn't include the cost of expanding and renovating the fire station. McGoldrick said any initial work done once the police department moved out would be mainly "paint and paper" work, until a long-term plan is designed.

Haddad said, through some creative financing, he believes the town could afford to take on a $4 million project, and have it cost the average household a little more than $1,000 spread over 20 years.

He said the town could save $148,266 a year by combining interest accrued from investing the $1.6 million payment from the MBTA for the right-of-way, with the money freed up by retiring the debt from the town hall expansion project.

The debt exclusion override for the project would come to 17 cents per $1,000 the first year, and dwindle down in the following years. After 20 years, a house valued at $565,000 will have paid $1,014 for the project.

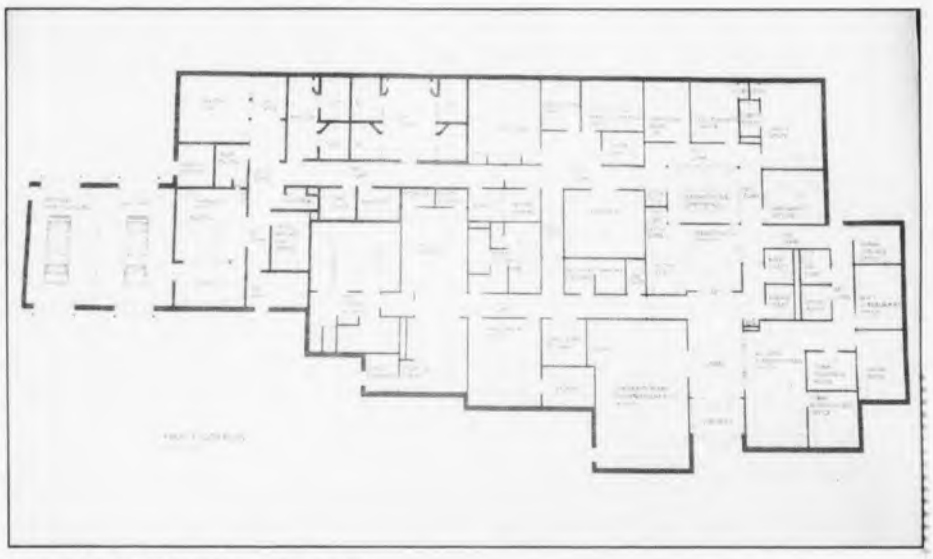
"We're trying to minimize the impact on the taxpayers," he said.

McGoldrick said the committee looked at a number of centrally-located properties around town, including the former Osgood School.

However, when the Route 3A location became available, the committee decided to recommend keeping the fire station where it is, and expand the current facility.

Haddad said because police are more mobile, a centralized location wasn't as crucial in finding a new police station.

The board welcomed Barry's offer of land, and will ask the fall Special Town Meeting on Nov. 5 to approve the gift.



Haddad said Barry, who is involved in a number of outstanding litigation matters with the town regarding his Cohasset Heights Ltd. landfill and is looking to open a new transfer facility off Crocker Lane, didn't ask for any special considerations when he made the offer.

"It was never brought up," he said. "This is a resident of the town looking to help."

Selectman Michael Sullivan called it a "great gesture."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris echoed Sullivan's thoughts and added, "I don't know if we would be able to go through with this project without it."

The board said it may include a $212,000 warrant article for the Nov. 5 Special Town Meeting to pay for architectural and engineering drawings.

Floor plan for the proposed new police station.

Last appeal for photos

This is a final appeal for photos for consideration for volume 3 of Cohasset town history. Author Jackie Dormitzer has almost finished her account of the last 50 years and the town history committee needs photos of town events, everyday life, town landmarks here and gone etc.

Young people in town are making a difference

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PERSSON

SHARE LOTS OF HUGS

Hello Cohasset. Well, based on what has gone in the past week, my heart is just not into writing this column. I am going to include the information that I received as well as a few comments that were emailed to me. I know that we have all been urged to "go about our regular routines, work and life" but it still seems so hard.

Please continue if possible to light candles in the evening to show the support and sympathy that Cohasset has. I know I speak for us all when I say that our heartfelt sympathy and sorrow go to all the families who have been affected by this horrible tragedy. Prayers and thoughts also go out to all the men and women who are working so hard to clear out the rubble. Please remember to read and help in anyway you can.

Children need a lot of reassurance as well, give them a positive job that they can do to help them feel like they are doing something. Most of all, hug everyone around you as much as possible, let them know daily how important they are to you and don't let the feelings of despair win. Better said than done!

MAKING A DIFFERENCE

I have had two stories about young people in our town making a difference! Students at the Deer Hill School donated $100 last Friday with no notice at all. Nathan Porter took it upon himself to bring a can to school and the children dug deep and the end result was $100 to the Red Cross! We are all very proud of you.

LEMONADE BENEFIT

Thirsty anyone? How about a nice glass of lemonade at a stand being run on the corner of Beechwood and Doane Street. This is by far the best lemonade stand in town and the reason is that all the proceeds are going to help the families of the victims in the Sept. 11 attack. Andrew Liberty, a 10-year-old fifth-grader is running the stand and this was his way of making a difference and helping. Andrew will be at the stand everyday after school until 5 or 6 each evening. I am sure that many children all around town are busy finding ways too help. Please send me all the great news about what they are doing to help. That alone can help to raise our spirits!

THANKS, DAVE

Dave Weeks, emergency dispatcher extraordinaire, is saying goodbye to the police-fire station to pursue another career! Over the years, Dave has answered innumerable emergency 9-1-1 calls with calmness and competence – he's also graciously handled all those non-emergency calls in his patient, unflappable manner! Here at the Mariner, will miss you Dave, good luck!

WAKEMAN COMPETES

Just in time before we went to press – we heard from the William Smith College field hockey team which will feature junior defender Neely Wakeman of Cohasset! Last year, the Herons captured the NCAA Div. III Championship with a 1-0 win over Springfield College in the championship game and finished the year with an awesome 20-1 mark, and school record 20-game winning streak. With Neely's help, the top squad is bound it repeat!

TRINITY SOCCER

The Trinity men's soccer team is looking good with junior co-captain forward Morgan Sandell of Cohasset sharing the helm. Morgan has been one of the top scorers in the New England Small College Athletic Conference for the past two seasons. He scored five goals with one assist in 2000 and had eight goals with six assists as a freshman. He was a first-tem all-NESCAC last season.

ROAD RACER

Jeff Gordon, Tony Stewart, Michael Schumacher, Mika Hakkinen and Juan Pablo Montoya all share one thing in common – they all started their careers behind the wheel of a racing kart.

Sam Parker, 12, of Cohasset could be following in their footsteps. Sam successfully completed F1 Boston's Junior Race School, and is now eligible to take part in F1 Boston's Junior Leagues and practice sessions.

Way to go, Sam!

SUPPORT SOCCER TEAM

Don't forget to buy a ticket for the Cohasset Soccer Boosters' annual pancake breakfast. It is being held Sunday, Sept. 30 at the Deer Hill School cafeteria from 8 am-12 p.m. You can purchase tickets at $5 each or a maximum per family of $20 from any Middle/High School soccer player or call Kathie at 383-1237. We need your support for our soccer team.

RAISED $571

From left, Ryan Barrow (12), Gracie Clougherty (10), Cory Barrow (9), Heather Sestito (12), Alyssa Campbell (12), Flossie Clougherty (12), MaKayla Barrow (6) and (seated) Stephanie Sestito (10), spent two days raising $571 for the American Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund. The kids set up a stand at the corner of Pleasant Street and Cushing Road and gave out cookies and cupcakes to passersby in exchange for donations.

CAMP BOURNEDALE

I want to send a special "have a great week" message to all the sixth-grade students, teachers, parents and staff on their trip next week to Camp Bournedale. Make sure to read all information that is being sent home and get your child pumped up for a fantastic experience!

PET PARADE AT FARMERS MARKET

This just came in!

Next Thursday, bring your pets to the Farmers Market on the Common for a fun and festive Pet Parade. This event will start at 4 p.m. and prizes will be awarded for best dressed, best behaved and more! Any questions you may have can be asked of Patty Keville at 781-383-1200.

Our first Schools In page will be appearing in next week's edition. Please have all news and information to me no later than Friday morning at 9 am. This will be your place to find all the upcoming events, meetings, individual school information and a whole lot more!

Make sure to find things to do for yourself and your families this week. It is important for us all to seek out friends, go for a walk together and just be with each other.

I am looking ahead to next week and would really love to have a lot of news and stories to work on and include in both columns. Please send it to me in one of the following ways:

Libbys celebrate 56 years together

The Libby Family, Glenn (Seal Beach, Calif.), Dennis (Guilford, Conn.), Kevin (Falmouth, Maine), Susan (Norwood), Frank Jr. (Needham), Nancy (Scituate), Michael (Cohasset), and Timothy (Hingham), wishes to announce the 56th wedding anniversary of their parents, Marguerite and Frank Libby on September 22, 2001. Longtime Cohasset residents since 1963, they will celebrate the occasion with their extensive family.

Frank and Marguerite are both natives of Boston. Marguerite grew up in Mission Hill and attended Mission Hill High School. Frank grew up on Binney Street and attended Commerce High School. They met while working at the Boston Envelope Company. After marriage, they were blessed with eight children. All eight are graduates of Cohasset High School.

Frank is a retired executive of United Liquors, and spends a good deal of time playing or thinking about golf. He is a member of the Hatherly Country Club. Marge enjoys walking, playing bridge and spoiling her grandchildren. They spend their winters in Naples, Fla. but always return to Cohasset for their home, family and friends.

Marguerite and Frank Libby, who have been married 56 years, are surrounded by their family.

Cavalcade of patriotic music

On Saturday, Sept. 22 at 4 p.m. at the Jane Carr Amphitheater in Hingham, South Shore Conservatory features an Evenings Under the Stars special performance, "Great Music for a Great Nation," a spectacular cavalcade of inspirational music by the conservatory's artist-educators and students. Admission to the concert is free, however, donations are requested. All funds raised by the concert will be sent directly to the American Red Cross.

The Hingham Police and Fire Honor Guard will also take part in the event to honor the fallen heroes and victims.

Response to the concert has been overwhelming according to conservatory director Jim Simpson. Not only have all performers come forward to donate their time, some of them passing up paid jobs to perform Saturday, but private citizens have offered to underwrite the cost of running the concert.

"The concert promises great music for a great nation."

—Jim Simpson, South Shore Conservatory

"South Shore Conservatory is grateful for the opportunity to help out in any way we can," Simpson says. "We have so many talented faculty members and students, the concert promises great music for a great nation."

Parking for the event is at the Hingham Bus Depot on 19 Fort Hill St., across from the South Shore Country Club and next to Thomas Auto Body. Concert goers will be transported to and from the Conservatory grounds by shuttle bus. Shuttle service begins one hour prior to the concert. With limited seating in the pavilion, those attending the concert are encouraged to arrive early or to bring a lawn chair.

Stars and stripes forever

Flags are flying throughout the country and all over the South Shore. Many are at half-staff and will remain so through Saturday (Sept. 22) at the request of President Bush.

Others are draped over garage doors or hanging from front doors. Some have been planted in summer's fading gardens; dozens more are waving from car and truck antennas on every roadway. Inundated by customers over the last week, flag stores like the Eagle Flag Company in Weymouth are sold out completely.

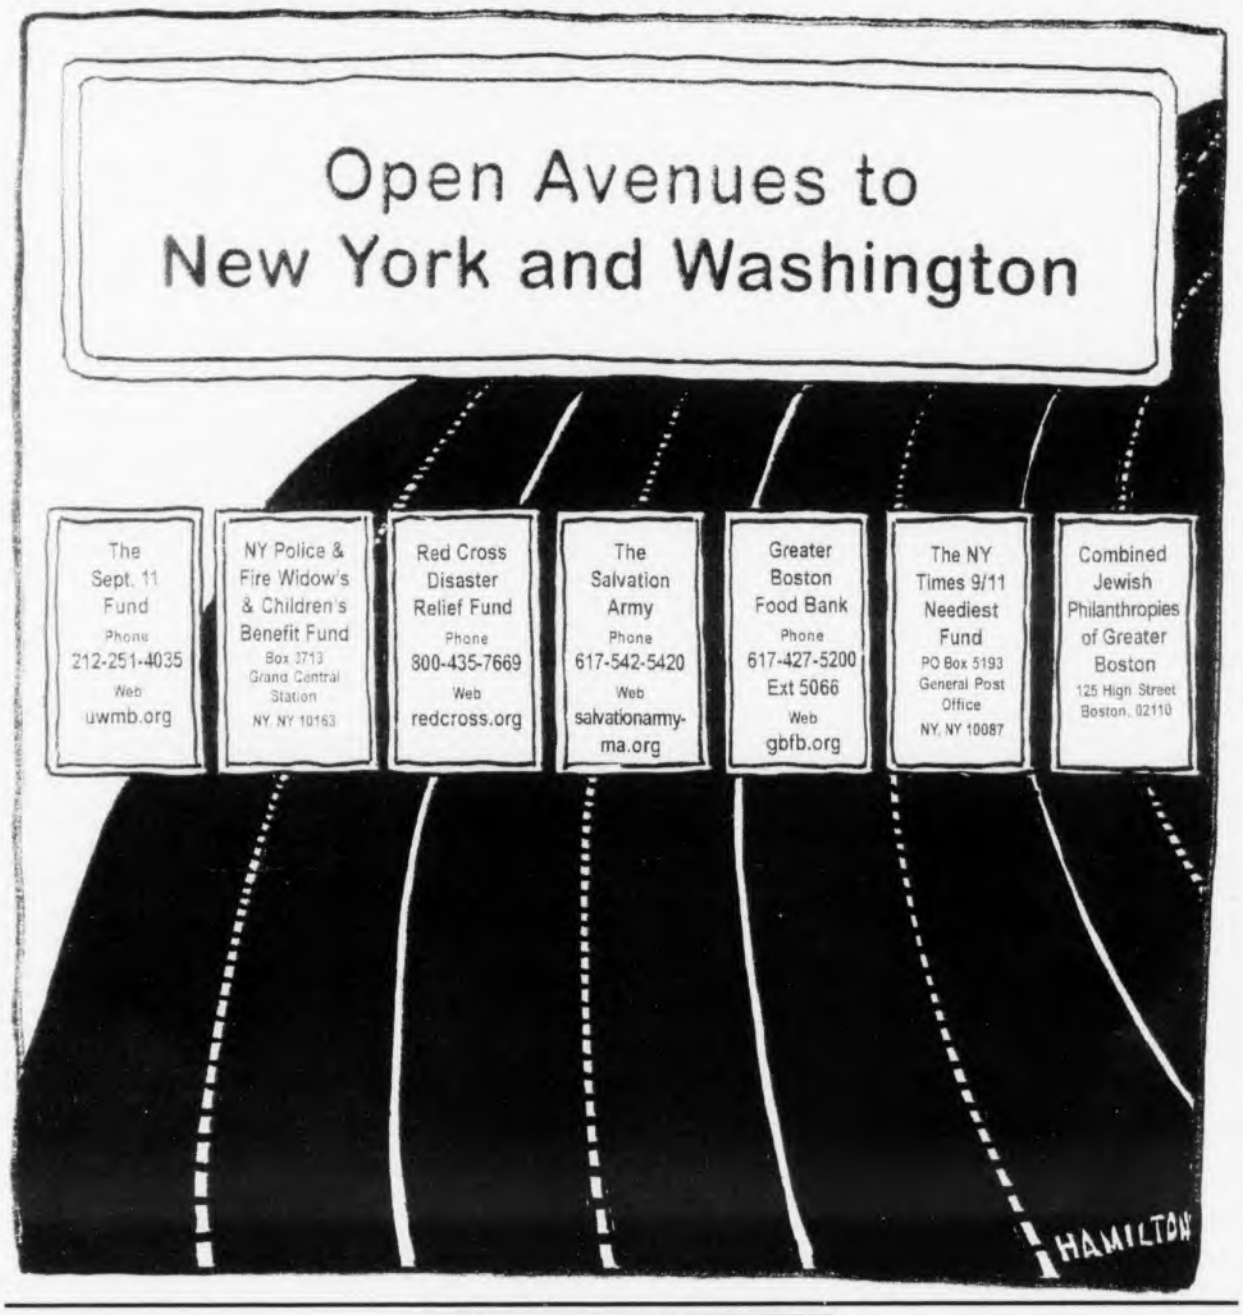
And flags aren't the only evidence of the surging patriotism we Americans are compelled to display at this time of deep national anguish, and indeed, anger. For as much as they wave in pride, our flags also defiantly fly in the face of terrorism.

It's far from business as usual for local businesses also making public expressions of patriotism and condolences. At the Mobil Station , the sign simply reads "God Bless America." At Hassan Woodcarving and Sign Company on Route 3A, there's an eye-catching American flag banner, the company made up in the shop, that fits on the base of the sign. Numerous other businesses and stores in our towns are displaying flags and messages of support.

As in the past our country is uniting in a time of trouble, but this is a trouble unlike any we've ever seen. We've been told we're at war and it will be a protracted conflict. It will be a war without clear boundaries against shadowy, elusive figures hell-bent on causing destruction and mayhem and terror with no regard for human lives, not even their own.

Not since the Gulf War has our nation rallied so strongly around our president asking more of him than perhaps we ever expected to. Our flag waving, our support for this crusade against terrorism will have to be an enduring patriotism. It must patiently prevail longer than the yellow ribbons we wrapped around trees during the Gulf War and perhaps longer even than the wars our parents and grandparents have fought against enemies we thought we knew.

There are those who say we don't have the attention span to follow and support a long fought war on terrorism. Some call this widespread show of patriotism a "spasm" — a knee-jerk response to last weeks devastation in New York and Washington D.C.; a case of stars and stripes for now, rather than forever.



We believe they're wrong. It is impossible to compare this international situation to any thing that has preceded it. There simply has never been anything like the attack on America the world watched on TV last Tuesday. Our embassies abroad have been bombed, American citizens in the Middle East have been taken hostage and killed. But never has a terrorist group inflicted so much destruction on our own soil — claiming so many lives, so suddenly. As our intelligence groups try to ferret out terrorist cells in this country and abroad with the help of an international community of support, our government will need Americans to remain united behind the flag — behind the nation's resolve bring to justice those responsible for these heinous crimes and put an end to terrorism everywhere.

In the coming months, more troops may be called up to serve in this war on terrorism. Many will be stationed here to protect American citizens in airports and office buildings as we try to get back to living our lives. Others may be sent to fight in foreign lands on battle grounds we've never seen. Then, as now our support — the "warm courage of national unity," Franklin Roosevelt spoke of, and President Bush invoked last week, will be needed.

If that unity and support is best symbolized in displaying the flag, keep them flying. Those colors will strengthen our leaders' resolve, they will bolster our military where ever they serve, and carry us all through the uncertain days ahead.

Service planned at Veterans park

The George H. Mealy American Legion Post plans a prayer and remembrance service at 11 a.m. Saturday at Veterans Memorial Park at the harbor – the final day American flags are to be flown at half-staff. Flags across the country return to full staff on Sunday.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Given short shrift

TO THE EDITOR:

Imagine doing something you love for 10 years without asking for or receiving a cent in return. Where living off the occasional "thank you" or "great job" is all you need to fuel your fire. Where countless Friday nights and Saturday mornings stick out on your schedule more than any other event. And imagine, just imagine, that experience coming to an end for no reason at all.

Last Saturday, Aaron Berger showed up at Cohasset High School's Alumni Field to start his 10th season as announcer for the Skippers varsity football team. Since 1992, Berger's booming voice called just about every touchdown, interception and tackle. Fans loved hearing Berger call the game, and his reliable play-by-play accounts made you feel as if you were out on that field with the other 22 players.

However, this past weekend, Berger's voice and legacy was told to go elsewhere. While preparing to call the first home game of the season versus Arlington Catholic, athletic director Ron Ford pulled Berger aside to let him know his job had been given to someone else. Just like that, years of dedication to a school that he'd given so much to had given up on him.

Apparently, Ford said the Football Boosters Club had decided it was time for a change and it was "out of his hands." The Boosters were unhappy with some of Berger's "rousing of the crowd" antics in the past and thought it was best to bring someone new in. However, instead of telling Berger, they waited till 20 minutes before kickoff to break the news.

After doing something he loved for the better of the school and the town at no cost but his own free time, Berger was rushed out of the booth quicker than you can say "personal foul."

Berger never asked for anything from Cohasset High School. Five of his siblings and his own son have been through the Cohasset school system and he was just giving back to the school and kids he formed a bond with over the years. He was always ready and willing to bring the action to the fans. He lived for those games.

All Cohasset officials had to do was pull Berger aside before the season to tell him they made a change. All they had to do was give him a call or even write him a letter. Instead, they waited for him to show up to the first game to break the news.

Shame on you, Ron Ford and the group of Boosters who made this decision behind the back of a man who has given so much to thousands of students over the years. Shame on you for waiting as long as you did to make a decision like this. Shame on you for taking something so positive away from the school, town and football program that was much better off with him than without him.

Every now an then, we meet those rare people in this world who really do make a difference in the lives of others. As far as Cohasset High School goes, Aaron Berger was one of those rarities. It's just too bad that even after 10 years, they didn't realize it.

TO THE EDITOR:

At the start of this football season, a joint decision was made by the Football Gridiron Club and myself to make a change in the Public Address Announcer position for the High School Football game. I regret that Aaron Berger was not informed in a timely manner and I take full responsibility for that miscommunication. I want to thank Aaron for all the years of service he has volunteered to the program. I have asked Aaron to return as the High School Basketball P.A. Announcer and I hope he takes me up on that offer.

I would also like to thank Dennis and Diane Dooley for their help in hanging the red, white, and blue bunting around Alumni Field last Saturday night. I want to thank Diane for donating her gardening skills and the flowers in the "CHS" bed at the entrance of Alumni Field. I also would like to thank Linda Bolster, who again assisted in the planting of the flowers around Alumni Field. And last but not least, I would like to thank Wallace St. John for donating the American Flags that the students from the C.H.S. Social Awareness Organization sold at the game. The money they raised at the game (including Rick Shea's generous donation of his Gridiron Club's 50/50 Raffle Winnings) was a large portion of the $1,200 the students raised over weekend. All of the proceeds will go to The American Red Cross's Disaster Relief Fund for the victim's of last week's tragedy. All of their efforts helped make last Saturday evenings football game a very special event.

From friends in Ireland

TO THE EDITOR:

I just wanted all the people in Cohasset (where we lived for two years) to know that everyone in Ireland is absolutely devastated, revolted and deeply distressed by the terrorist attacks that took place on Tuesday the 11th of September.

It is a day that will live in everyone's memory forever and one that we will tell our grandchildren about. But we will also tell them about the sheer bravery, coming together and support that Americans gave to each other in the aftermath of this atrocity.

Our Prayers and thoughts are with all Americans as they struggle in the days and months ahead. Our hearts also go out to those Irish families who have lost loved ones also.

Ireland is with you every inch of the way.

'A must read'

TO THE EDITOR:

The letter portion of your newspaper is becoming a "must read" for me. Particularly, the information from Mr. Bobo and the opinions of R. Murray Campbell.

I should like to add one bit of description to Mr. Campbell's last note in that the one child pram has gone to a two-seater and now to a three-seater in which the seats are side-by-side. In addition, there is usually a dog, leashed or otherwise.

It seems inevitable that two such entourages are fated to be passing on one of our corners when a car comes around, also.

Mr. Bobo's information that we now have an ally in our geese chasing is most welcome. I hope the swans on Little Harbor will also be made to feel less welcome. I do miss the number and variety of the birds whom they appear to have evicted.

Displaying the flag

• On a vehicle – Attach the flag to the antenna or clamp the flagstaff to the right fender. Do not lay the flag over the vehicle.

• On a building – Hang the flag on a staff or on a rope over the sidewalk with the stars away from the building.

• Over the street – Hang the flag with the stars to the east on a north- south street or north on an east-west street.

• Other flags, separate poles – Hang all flags on equal poles. Hang the U.S. flag on its own right, hoist it first and lower it last.

• In a window – Hang the flag vertically with the stars to the left of anyone looking at it from the street.

• Half-mast – This is a sign of mourning. Raise the flag to the top of the pole then lower it to the half way point. Before lowering the flag, raise it to the top again at the end of the day.

• Upside down – An upside-down flag is considered a distress signal.

• Multiple staffs – If you display the flag on a staff with other flags around it, place the flag at the center and highest point. Crossed staffs – Keep the flagstaff higher and on its own right.

• In a hall or lobby – Hang the flag vertically across from the main entrance with the stars to the left of anyone coming through the door.

Grant puts village project on fast track

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The planned revitalization of Cohasset Village can speed ahead thanks to a $1.5 million state grant to pay for streetscape and other improvements.

But enhancing the village is only part of what the grant will do, state officials say. Improvements to the downtown area are also expected to generate as many as 100 new jobs.

State Secretary of Transportation Kevin J. Sullivan and state Highway Commissioner Matthew J. Amorello awarded the Public Works Economic Development grant to the town Thursday during a special ceremony on Cohasset Common.

Amorello said economic development and infrastructure improvements go hand in hand. He said streetscape improvements will help keep businesses in the village.

"As revitalization of the streetscape goes forward, it will make sure job retention is strong here," he said.

The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority agreed to write a letter supporting the town's PWED grant application as part of its mitigation agreement with the town for restoration of the Greenbush Line of the Old Colony Railroad Project.

Although the MBTA's letter gave the grant a boost – the money is the town's to spend regardless of whether the controversial train project becomes a reality.

Amorello praised the town for putting together a comprehensive application.

"This is one of the most competitive programs the state operates," he said.

The application was drafted by town planner Liz Harrington in conjunction with an independent consultant, the CRC and village task force, Rizzo said.

Dean Rizzo, director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, which is working in conjunction with the town on village improvements, said the money will be used for sidewalks in the entire village area from the post office to the Elm and Brook streets, new lighting and street paving.

"We can use it for anything and everything," Rizzo said. "The grant leaves it up to the community how to use the dollars."

All the selectmen were on hand for the ceremony,

"As revitalization of the streetscape goes forward, it will make sure job retention is strong here."

— Matthew J. Amorello, MassHighway commissioner along with other town officials and representatives from state Rep. Garrett Bradley's and state Sen. Robert Hedlund's offices.

"Cohasset very much appreciates this grant," said Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed. "We have a lot of work to do and this will go into the downtown section along the rail bed to improve this part of town."

Sec. Sullivan said the PWED grant program, which allows municipalities to fill out applications to identify transportation projects that spur economic development either through job growth or job retention, started in the early 1980s. But when the economy soured in the late 80s and the state faced a $2 billion deficit, the program was put on hold.

Since the grant program was resurrected in the early 1990s, there have been $150 million in awards affecting about 6,000 jobs, he said. The state currently enjoys its highest employment levels ever and has a $4 billion surplus.

"We've come along way and we've got to continue to invest," Sullivan said. "Now is not the time to pull back and rein in costs because of an economic downturn. Now is the time to increase the program."

Work on the village could start by the end of 2002, Rizzo said. He said the estimated $2-1/4 million revitalization project could be paid for with no direct cost to Cohasset taxpayers. The $1.5 million PWED grant coupled with the $170,000 transportation enhancement grant for the sidewalk along South Main Street in front of St. Stephen's Church will pick up most of the tab. And the MBTA will pay to reconstruct the town parking lot and the Ripley Road intersection by the South Shore Art Center in the village as part of the Greenbush project.

The state Department of Environmental Management also recently awarded a $16,200 Historic Landscape Preservation Grant for Cohasset Common.

A public forum on village plans is slated for Oct. 11 with the time and place to be announced. After that selectmen will review the plans and could decided to take them to the Oct. 29 Special Town Meeting for approval.

Health news from Judy Fitzsimmons, RN, Cohasset Public Health Nurse

September is National Cholesterol Education Awareness Month

This week it may be appropriate to look more closely at our mortality. It seems odd that many of our friends are on cholesterol reducing medication, a clue that heightened awareness exists in good measure in Cohasset, and yet, the monthly morbidity report indicates that the greatest killer in Town is heart disease, more that twice as many deaths as the other deadly disease: cancer.

The disheartening fact, however is that high cholesterol levels are rising in people age 20 and over. The information out there is enormous about the risks you run if you loose sight of your lifestyle goals, such as diet improvement, increased physical activity, weight control, and, if necessary, drug therapy. If you'd like to have an estimate of your probability of dying from heart disease, go to our health screening day, and get a cholesterol screen, and your blood pressure taken; then go on the Web to:

"http://hin.nhlbi.nih.gov/atpiii/calculator.asp?usertype=prof" and get a calculation of your probability of dying in ten years from high cholesterol.

LIBRARY CORNER

New arrangement

Come in and take a look at the new set-up of the library room to the left of the front desk. Barbara Powers and Dick Whitley were instrumental in re-arranging the bookcases and furniture to provide more space for a speaker. They have also allowed for more comfortable seating. Hats off to these two trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Children's Room

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is now accepting registration for the fall preschool story hour. Children between the ages of three and five are welcome to participate. The program will consist of six sessions and will begin Oct. 15, and end Nov. 20. We will offer a Monday morning session from 10 to 11 a.m. and a Tuesday afternoon session from 1 to 2 p.m. You may register for either the morning or afternoon session by calling the library at 781-383-1348 or by signing up in person. Space is limited.

Sculpture at library

"Mask of Terror" by Mimi White of Cohasset is on display in the New Book Room of the library. White, a local sculptor, created this powerful work of art as a response to the tragic attack on the World Trade Towers. Her four-foot painted sculpture made of paper and cardboard conveys her sense of terror and devastation felt by all who have lived through this terrible event.

Elder issues

Cohasset Elder Affairs will offer a four-session program for elders and caregivers in the South Shore area on four consecutive Wednesday evenings in October. The sessions will begin with a light supper from 6-6:30 p.m., followed by the program from 6:30-8:30 p.m. Call 781-383-9112 to sign up.

Transportation for Cohasset residents. Sessions will be held at Cohasset Elder Affairs, 3 Main St.

- Oct. 3, legal and financial concerns of elders
- Oct. 10, housing options, including public housing, assisted living and retirement communities, and nursing and rest home facilities
- Oct. 17, community resources available to elders living at home.
- Oct. 24, coping with feelings of loneliness, depression, and isolation.

Pre-registration is required. A donation of $8 for the entire series, or $2.50 per session, is requested.

'To the oceans white with foam'

MY VIEW

PATSY MURRAY

Until last Tuesday I thought the hardest thing I've ever done was to interview the parents of Sgt. Richard Fitts, the first young man from Braintree to die in Vietnam.

His parents had moved to Marshfield so I had to drive there to talk to them. The experience was unforgettable. To this day I have the bracelet bearing Dick Fitts' name. I value dearly, too, the photo of my nephew standing in front of the Vietnam Memorial Wall in the Nation's Capital looking at all those precious names.

I was wrong. Only 33 years later the unimaginable has happened. On Tuesday, Sept. 11, 2001, our country experienced the unimaginable. An inhuman attack on our own land — on the city representing America to the entire world — stunned us into numbness.

I've told myself over and over now fortunate I am to be retired, not to have the responsibility for putting out a community newspaper, not to have to steel myself with the objectivity editors and reporters must impose on themselves to do their job. I can succumb to my feelings.

Since the morning of Sept. 11 I have cried so much surely the well of tears is empty. Yet over and over again during these terrible days, I have learned the well does not run dry.

I do not know a single person riding on one of those doomed plans. But I am an American. I am a human being. I love the Red Sox, the Notre Dame football team, the BC Eagles, the Duke basketball team

How lavishly we all use the word love. I love a cold beer. I love reading the papers with my coffee every morning. I love the first snow fall. I love the State of Maine, my native land. I love to go out on the porch at night to watch the stars sparkling in the sky and suddenly spot the twinkling lights of an airplane rising from Logan, headed for who knows where, climbing, climbing, challenging the stars to move over and make room.

All those loves, of course, become meaningless without the love of family, the love of friends and, yes, the love of country.

When the bombs fell on Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941 I was a little child. Still I understood something terrible had happened to my country and nothing would be the same again after that Day of Infamy.

But all of us kids could still walk to school, could play with our friends, could go to see the Buck Jones cowboy movie on Saturday afternoon. We knew no fear, our boys were fighting to keep America safe.

If anyone told me, they had dreamed a plane struck the Twin Towers in New York City, most likely I'd have said "What did you eat for supper?"

Tuesday morning I went to the 7 o'clock Mass at Sacred Heart to show my love for a dear friend who had just died. When I came home I sat down at the kitchen table with my coffee and donut and turned on the telly to get the news. My attention was on reading the papers and eating a bowl of cereal.

Then came those fearsome words: "We interrupt this program..." A plane, we were told, had plowed into the World Trade Center at the tip of Manhattan Island in New York City. Reporters scrambled to beat each other for the latest information on this huge "accident." Not one of them could anticipate in just a few minutes another plane, filled with gasoline, filled with ordinary folks going about the business of living their daily lives, would crash like a batting ram into the second tower.

Horror, disbelief, numbness followed step by step. We were reeling with numbness when we learned of the heroic passengers who chose to die on their own terms, on a field in Pennsylvania to save our country's beautiful White House.

We Americans realized, as the shock of these terrible moments stopped time, our country was under attack.

No one had to tell us, an attack on our country is an attack on each one of us, man, woman, child.

The Day of Infamy many of us still remember, however dimly, suddenly paled in memory. This new Day of Infamy stretched before us, hour after unbearable hour.

Once again, though, just as they did Dec. 7, 1941, Americans on Sept. 11, 2001 — so many more of us, so diverse in race, creed, color — we Americans refused to buckle under. The people of our country, all of us immigrants, showed the cowards who took out their wrath on innocent men, women and children, we will not cower. We are "one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

Cowards beware, justice will be served.

Each Friday night during World War II, as American boys fought in the jungles of the Pacific and the mud and mire of Europe, Kate Smith, the "Voice of America," ended her program by singing the song Irving Berlin wrote for her, "God Bless America."

President Bush could find no better words to end his remarks on the National Day of Mourning last Friday.

The cowards who inflicted this terrible pain on so many families, our brothers and sisters, our fellow Americans, are finding out hour after hour, day after day, there's nothing casual about those three words.

"From the mountains, to the prairies, to the oceans white with foam, God bless America, my home sweet home."

Patsy Murray is former editor of the Weymouth News, one of the Cohasset Mariner's sister newspapers.

Jacobs Meadow restoration proposal gets high marks

Army Corps final ruling expected

By Rick Collins

Coastal Zone Management has agreed with some of the recommendations made by Tutela Engineering regarding the Jacobs Meadow Salt Marsh reclamation project — including keeping the tidal gates propped open with rubber wedges and allowing as much water into the meadow as possible without causing flooding problems.

CZM, a state agency, also offered its assistance in creating an Open Marsh Water Management program that would look at re-grading and configuring the salt marsh's channels in order to optimize tidal flow into the area.

The group did disagree with Tutela's proposal to cut down the existing invasive freshwater reeds, called Phragmites, and treat the area with rock salt.

"The rock salt treatment is not something we are familiar with, and to the best of our knowledge has not been pursued in New England," CZM said in a letter sent to a number of other state and federal agencies.

For the past year, Jacobs Meadow has been under the scrutiny of CZM, the Army Corps of Engineers, Federal Emergency Management Agency, state Department of Environmental Management and federal Environmental Protection Agency.

Tutela Engineering president Domenic Tutela said when he applied to the state for permits to add a third outfall pipe from the meadow into the harbor to help alleviate flooding problems, he was told he did not need federal permits. However, the Army Corps contends that he did, and it would have recommended installing self-regulating tide gates to help restore Jacobs Meadow as a salt marsh.

Since last year, the town, Tutela and the Army Corps have been engaged in a debate over whether the flapper-style tide gates installed two years ago allow enough saltwater into Jacobs Meadow to allow the salt marsh to come back.

Last fall, Tutela Engineering - which is serves as the town engineer for the project — installed neoprene wedges into the tidal gates and monitored the water levels in the marsh. In its findings, Tutela said the marsh routinely received three feet of saltwater every tidal cycle, and that any more water would result in abutters' yards becoming flooded.

CZM agreed with this level, and also urged the town to create an "operation and maintenance plan," for removing the wedges during a major flooding event such as a Nor'easter.

CZM concluded that although "this project has been less than ideal...with some coordination and additional efforts, the project as implemented, could achieve the mutual goals of flood control and resource protection/restoration."

The town and Tutela considered the letter good news in its ongoing battle with the Army Corps.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he was "very pleased," with its recommendations and that his only concern was making sure residents along Jacobs Meadow weren't flooded out.

Tutela said the letter echoed what he had been saying all along. "As far as we're concerned, [what it recommended] is what we've been doing," he said. "We totally agree with them."

Haddad and Tutela met with state and local agencies last week. Haddad said the town has been asked to do some additional studies examining exactly how much water can be allowed into the meadow, without causing property damage.

Lehr steps down as recycling chair

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

After 19 years at the helm, Arthur Lehr has announced his resignation as chairman of the town Recycling Committee.

Lehr was one of the three original members of the committee when formed in 1982, and has been its only chairman.

"I've just decided it's time," he said this week about his decision. "I'm going to stay on the committee, just be more low-key."

Lehr said there are a couple of projects in the works that he wants to remain involved with, such as making improvements to some of the storage areas at the town Recycling Transfer Facility off Cedar Street.

He said he first became involved as a member of the building committee, when the town landfill was capped and converted into the current RTF.

"Recycling newspaper was probably our first start," Lehr said of the recycling committee's early days. "Back when you could burn year-round, the custodian up there used to just set the paper on fire, but the state put a stop to that."

The RTF, one of the oldest facilities of its type in the area, has expanded to now have sections where residents can recycle glass, cardboard, plastic, batteries, motor oil and brush.

"At one time for a couple years we almost led state in recycling percentage," he said.

"[Lehr] has been the driving force and made the committee what it is," said Selectman Merle Brown, who has served on the recycling committee alongside Lehr since 1982. "He has really worked hard."

Lehr said the success of the RTF, plus the new Pay-As-You-Throw program are two accomplishments he's particularly proud of.

"PAYT took two years to do, but it has proven very, very effective," he said. "In the first month, we had a 50 percent drop."

The PAYT program was adopted at the 2000 Annual Town Meeting as a way to increase recycling, and cut down on the total amount of trash being disposed. All trash must be stuffed into a 15 or 30-gallon town trash bag, that can be purchased for $1. Lehr said he expects the total reduction to level off at about 30 percent after a few months.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he was saddened to hear of Lehr decision.

"He has been a valuable asset to me in my four years here," he said. "I wish him the best."

Haddad also pointed out Lehr's efforts as the town's clerk of the works for the recently completed park at the Hagerty site off Parker Avenue.

"He didn't charge the town a dime for his work," he said.

Town Meeting called for Nov. 5

Citizens' petitions due Tuesday; thick warrant expected

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen have called for a Nov. 5 Special Town Meeting to be held in the Sullivan Gymnasium at Cohasset Middle/High School at 7 p.m.

And although the warrant has just opened, it appears the meeting could be a lengthy one.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told Selectmen Tuesday that he could have as many as 30 articles for the board to review at its next meeting scheduled for Sept. 25.

All citizens' petitions must be received at the Town Clerk's Office by Sept. 25 at 4 p.m. and include 100 signatures from registered town voters.

The Town Meeting is expected to address a number of financial issues, such as departmental budget shortfalls, and investing extra free cash for the long-term. It also could see a number of big ticket items, such as the $1.2 million final phase of the James Brook Flood Control project, and the design costs for a new town police station [see related story, page 3].

Selectmen have placed articles on the warrant to name the former Hagerty property as "Mariner's Park," and to allow the library construction project to move forward without its construction grant money in hand.

According to an April 2000 Town Meeting vote, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library construction project at the former school site could only begin providing the current building is sold, that the library raised $700,000, and that it had received a $1.5 million library construction grant. The library project was put first on the waiting list for available construction grants, but trustees hope to move forward with the project before costs increase further.

Another article would establish a Community Preservation Committee, as required under the Community Preservation Act. The town adopted the act, which places a voluntary surcharge on resident's tax bills to be used to buy open space, recreational land, or for historic preservation this past spring. The appointed committee would consist of members of the town conservation commission, historical commission, planning board, board of selectmen acting as the town's park commissioners, housing authority, water commission and three residents at large.

Selectmen are expected to consider an additional article that would fund a sidewalk construction project along Forest Avenue.

The Norfolk County Board of Engineers gave selectmen a number of pricing options involving different construction options and materials. The prices ranged from $141,000 if built with asphalt, and using the South Shore Collaborative's materials,; and $325,000 if done through a hired contractor, with granite curbs, and a formal drainage plan for the low-lying area near Heather Drive.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris supported the project Tuesday, saying, "We've been talking about doing this for way too long."

But Selectman Merle Brown said the King Street stretch toward Lily Pond is much more dangerous and should be looked at first.

Selectmen also are debating whether or not to place an "advisory" article on the warrant regarding the Village Revitalization Task Force's village improvement plans.

The VRTF, has been working in conjunction with the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a privately-funded non-profit group that has funded the task force's engineering and planning effort. Its plans include reconstructing the sidewalks throughout the village and redesigning the Ripley Road/Pleasant Street intersection.

Last week, the town received a $1.5 million state Public Works Economic Development [see related story, page 7], nearly enough to fund the VRTF's entire proposal.

Selectmen don't need Town Meeting authorization to spend the money, but said they will adhere to their promise to bring any village construction plans before the town.

Town history set for June release

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The book 50 years in the making should be available in less than nine months.

The "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III," written by South Main Street resident Jacqueline Dormitzer, covers the events, happening and changes in Cohasset between 1950 and 2000, and is in the final stages of preparation.

Since being formed through a Town Meeting vote in October of 1996, the Town History Committee, chaired by Atlantic Avenue resident Wigmore Pierson, has sifted through 50 years of town history, including events, photos, maps and charts. Now the committee is able to narrow its focus on smaller, but still important, details such as the type of paper to print the book on.

The committee, which had at one time ballooned to nearly 20 members, has slimmed down to 10, with each member playing a crucial role.

"This is a terrific committee, with everyone able to take on different parts," said Pierson, who has chaired the committee since its inception. "This is without doubt the best committee I've ever worked with."

Dormitzer, who has attacked the book decade by decade, said she is currently working on a rough draft of the section covering the 1990s.

But that doesn't mean the previous 40 years are completely finished. Because history builds on itself, events sometimes require her to go back and insert additional information into previous sections, Dormitzer said.

"And then I still have to go back and make sure it reads smooth and that it flows," she said.

The 50 years worth of text is due to the publisher Dec. 15, as well as the 150 photographs that will accompany the words.

The book's editor, Atlantic Avenue resident Molly Hochkeppel Pierson, has the daunting task of pulling together the photographs of events such as blizzards, town Memorial Day parades, and Girl Scout outings from the past five decades, with much help from Ann Pompeo of Forest Avenue.

Pompeo said she gave Pierson 100 photographs to sort through this week, and expected to receive up to 500 more within the next week.

"They are coming in," she told the committee at its meeting Monday night.

Pierson said the book will contain about 15 black and white photographs per chapter, plus an inserted middle section of between 16 and 20 pages of color photos. The committee also discussed Monday night the possibility of inserting a fold out section showing the town's development over the course of 50 years.

Reservoir Road resident Harold Coughlin and Jim Hamilton of King Street have been organizing the technical aspects of the book, such as print style and design.

Coughlin, a book designer by trade, reminded the group of the importance of holding true to its deadline of Dec. 15, when all text, photos, maps, captions and photo credits are due to the printer. He said a book publisher considers a book a manufacturing process and not merely a printing process.

"We're buying a slug of time," he said. "If we miss our opening, it's gone for months and we go to the back of the line."

Coughlin and Hamilton also wowed the committee by showing off a dummy version of the book's dust cover, which features a dramatic view of the Town Common in relation to Little Harbor taken from the sky.

Absent from the meeting was Hubert Vanderlugt, who has taken on the task of corporate fundraising for the book, and Lou Harvey, who is working on the book's marketing and eventual web version.

The committee has already pre-sold 300 copies of the book for $20, and said town residents can still buy pre-sale copies until Jan. 1 for $27.50.

Three separate Town Meeting votes allocated a total of $65,000 for the book, but the committee said the money will eventually be repaid back through sales.

"The book will pay for itself," said Dormitzer.

Beach Street resident Louis Eaton said he hopes to prepare a series of articles promoting the book for the Mariner, starting around the beginning of the year.

The committee also thinks the third volume will spur interest in the previous two, written by E. Victor Bigelow in 1898, and Burtram Pratt in 1956, respectively.

The third volume will only go up until Dec. 31, 2000, and won't include the town's reactions to the terrorist attacks at the World Trade Center and Pentagon.

Dormitzer said she will mention last week's events in her author's preface and in the conclusion, and that they should be a "very interesting starting-off point" for the next volume in 49 years.

"It's just too soon to really look at how it will affect the town," she said. "The next person will be able to look back with perspective and say we rose to the occasion or something like that."

Anyone interested in ordering a pre-sale copy of the "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III" is asked to contact Wigmore Pierson at 781-383-6940 by January 1.

Town comes together at ecumenical service

2001 when U.S. airliners commandeered by hijackers flew into the twin towers of the World Trade Center and then the Pentagon, killing thousands innocent people and hundreds of rescue workers who came to their aid.

"Our hearts are full of sadness and mourning," said the Rev. John R. Mulvehill as he welcomed the throng that came from a range of faiths.

Mulvehill was joined for the service by the Rev. Gary Ritts, pastor, and Max Olmstead, associate pastor of the Second Congregational Church; the Rev. Jennifer Justice of First Parish; Father John Matheas of the Greek Orthodox Church; the Rev. Doug Fisher of Beechwood Congregational Church and the Rev. Cliff Cutler, pastor, and the Rev. Andy Shotsvel, associate pastor, of St. Stephen's.

All offering collected during the service will be donated to the Red Cross relief effort.

Each clergy member either read a prayer, psalm, poem or told a story. Their messages were interspersed with hymns including a rousing rendition of "God Bless America" where nearly all in attendance sang at the top of their voices.

The theme of the service did not focus on war or revenge but on faith and peace.

The Rev. Justice gathered all the children at the front of the church where she shared a true story about an Israeli soldier patrolling the West Bank, who, while being pelted by rocks by Palestinian children, managed to turn the incident around.

"How do I find love here instead of war?" Justice said the soldier thought. "So he started to juggle and turned the rocks into rubber balls." She said then the children started to laugh and were filled with love instead of hatred.

"I ask that you take that love the soldier found in his heart and pass it all around the room," Justice said.

Then in a touching moment, the dozens of children got up and walked throughout the sanctuary hugging everyone they saw.

The Rev. Ritts of Second Congregational said coming together in times like these is so important.

"One of the most wonderful gifts we have here in this community is the privilege and freedom to be together." He thanked the children for their spontaneous expression of love through their hugs.

"The children shared a gift that we adults are so often afraid of but so desperately need," he said.

Ritts also read "The New Colossus" by Jewish-American poet and philanthropist, Emma Lazarus, that is inscribed in bronze at the base of the Statue of Liberty on Bedloe Island, New York Harbor.

"She still stands and so do we, our arms outstretched," Ritts said.

Local EMT helps at Ground Zero in Manhattan

ers of the World Trade Center once stood. While positioned near a building that started to shift – Bonanno and others were immediately moved to another location. In the rush, Bonanno was only able to grab one of his medical bags but not the other. The one that contained his wallet, cell phone, identification and ticket home had to be left behind.

"Then they put me in an aid station in the lobby of the American Express building at Ground Zero, 30 feet away from where the rubble landed," Bonanno said.

Initially he was told to "go outside and help out." So Bonanno, who runs his own photography business, spent several hours as part of a line of about 30 workers passing five-gallon pails full of debris from one to another.

"The debris was being picked up one shovel-ful at a time and put into a five-gallon pail, which was passed down the line and emptied into a big pile, which was eventually removed by a front loader," he recalls. "But if there was evidence of a body, the battalion chief yelled 'stop' — and the digging was done one handful at a time."

The lobby of the American Express building where Rich Bonanno volunteered is just 30 feet from Ground Zero. Here, firefighters and iron workers wearing face masks sleep on cots to get some rest between shifts.

The former twin towers of the World Trade Center, once 110 stories tall, are reduced to two stories.

Then about ten-to-12 people would work in a rectangle to excavate by hand and put any body parts into body bags. Bonanno said the area where he was working must have been a courtyard because the workers kept running into cement and grass.

Later, Bonanno went into the aid station where he helped irrigate the eyes of firefighters and iron workers with a saline solution for the next 10 hours. One volunteer would hold the eye open, while another would irrigate it.

"So much [dust] would literally flow out of their eyes, it was incredible," Bonanno says. "There was continuously someone in the seat to get their eyes irrigated."

"The firefighters were so gracious – thanking us for helping them," he recalls. "They were thankful for a wet towel to wipe their faces."

Some of the men couldn't hold back their emotions.

"As I was irrigating the eyes of an iron-worker, he just started to cry," Bonanno says. "He said, 'I come from a family of iron workers, my father built these buildings and now I'm cutting them up.'"

When the morning light on Thursday – Bonanno could truly see the devastation first-hand including the remains of the twin towers that once stood 110 stories tall – with their thousands of tons of steel and concrete and 50,000 acres of windows reduced to rubble.

"By that time, I left Ground Zero to head back home," Bonanno says. "I was exhausted and they had more help than they needed." There was only one problem – his ticket home, money and ID were back in that bag left by an ambulance which was still in a cordoned-off area.

So the former Cohasset call firefighter flagged down a vehicle that had N.Y. Dept. of Transportation written on its side.

"The driver asked where I was from," Bonanno said. "He said, 'you came up for this? I'll take you to Penn Station.'" Bonanno said the man walked him to an Amtrak officer, who wrote him a ticket home.

Once back at the station in Dedham, Bonanno had the same problem – no wallet and no money to retrieve his car from the parking lot. However, the conductor at the station remembered him from the day before and "took care of it" for him. But the story doesn't end there.

Later that evening, Bonanno received a call from New York from a member of the fire department who said, "I have your bag." He said he would give it to someone from Massachusetts and found a firefighter from Medford. Bonanno met the Medford firefighter at Archbishop Williams High School, which is just off Route 3 in Braintree, and retrieved his bag.

Bonanno said he could not have just sat in Pat's barbershop or at home feeling helpless.

"I was just a four-hour train ride away and it was worth every minute," Bonanno says about heading to New York to volunteer.

He also said he'll never listen to anyone who says New Yorkers are rude, ever again.

"I'll never think that again," he says. "I was treated like gold."

shirts. All donations will be brought to the Salvation Army drop-off center in Quincy, and then straight down to New York City.

Nearly 1,000 people filled St. Anthony's Church Sunday for an ecumenical service led by local clergy [see related story.]

"The town should be proud of itself for the spirit it displayed last week," Selectman Thomas Callahan said at Tuesday's board meeting.

Cohasset Middle/High School Principal Michael Jones said the school's Social Awareness Group sold small American flags at last Friday's football game against Arlington Catholic, and that the middle school hopes to conduct some sort of fundraiser in the near future.

Fund-raising efforts are also being organized at the Deer Hill and Osgood schools.

Both schools' principals said their students were reacting well to last week's events.

"Right now we're settling in," Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan said Monday sporting a patriotic tie in accordance with the school's Red, White and Blue Day.

Osgood Principal Janet Sheehan said the school observed Friday's National Day of Prayer and Remembrance, as designated by President Bush, and then celebrated the 187th anniversary of the writing of the "Star Spangled Banner," by Francis Scott Key in 1814.

All three schools called a faculty meeting last Tuesday and had instructors read their students' an age-appropriate fact sheet, followed by some discussion.

"We have not had any students need to go to an adjustment counselor," said Callahan.

Sheehan said her students know the general details, but are unable at their age to grasp the full consequences of the terrorist attack. She said teachers have encouraged their students to ask any questions about what happened and to talk to their parents about it.

Unlike in other South Shore communities, Cohasset police said they have not received any reports of hate crimes.

Susan Etkind, head of the town's Diversity Committee, said people have to realize that Americans of all races and faiths have been affected by the attacks.

"People of all races and ethnic origins have been killed and are now supporting and helping us," she said. "We have all been traumatized by the recent events and are all living with a tremendous amount of anxiety and sadness and anger. We hope people will not strike out against American-Arabs or others of Middle Eastern heritage or anyone who just looks different.

"Anger is a normal and understandable reaction to this event, but we hope an entire country or entire religion is not judges harshly because of one militant faction," she added.

Some Cohasset businesses were bracing for the economic fall-out of the terrorist attacks.

Victor Vanderlugt, of the Cohasset-based Hub Shipping Company, said the company hadn't yet been impacted, but was expecting some ripples.

Hub Shipping transports raw materials from places such as Italy and China, and frequently uses New York City ports.

"Right now vessels aren't coming in or out," Vanderlugt said.

After four days off, Wall Street reopened with a predictable thud, falling more than 600 points, or 7 percent of its value.

John Flanagan of the Cohasset Edward Jones brokerage office said he had spent the non-trading days checking on his 650 clients, and reassuring them.

Flanagan said the market dropped quickly because of the sell orders that had accumulated last week. But he added that personally, he had only two sell orders.

"You shouldn't be investing in the short-term, you should have a seven to 10-year timeline," he said. "After most tough events the market always opens down, but comes back."

He pointed out that stocks were down early at the start of the Gulf War, but soon picked back up and segued into the longest era of prosperity the nation had ever seen.

"Time will always be our best ally," he said.

Local citizens line up for Old Glory

Even though America has tried to adopt a "business-as-usual" atmosphere, St. John said she has made a conscious effort to make the flags available at a bare-minimum cost, while still covering her expenses, such as bringing in extra help to deal with the crush of people coming into her store.

"We've had lines out of the store all-day, non-stop," she said. "On Saturday, we had to have a police detail. People were parking on Route 3A."

Because the store only has one register, St. John said many sales receipts were written up by hand, and she has yet to figure out exactly how many flags she has sold.

"We are completely sold out of everything. It's all gone, decals, bins, bumper stickers, buntings," she said. "We were trying to limit what people could buy, but we still had to send people away unhappy."

St. John said she has no idea when she'll get her next delivery of flags.

"I'm in line with everyone else," she said.

She remembered the outburst of patriotism during the Gulf War, but also remembered how fast it dissipated when the United States rolled to victory after just a few months.

"I get the feeling this is very different," she said of the more recent outburst. "I think people appreciate what they have in a much bigger way, and they're using the flag as a symbol of that."

Even though it's difficult to enjoy her store's success in light of the tragedy, she said she can enjoy her role in the recent spate of patriotism.

"As I drive around and see all the flags on cars and houses and businesses, I'm really happy," she said. "I'm happy with the patriotism and that I'm able to play a part."

St. John said she plans on sending a donation from the flag store down to New York to help with the ongoing relief efforts.

Stars of the Week

Mike Snowdale

Making his varsity debut, the junior quarterback threw for a pair of touchdowns, and provided steady direction all game for the offense to lead the Skippers to a 28-6 win over Arlington Catholic Friday night.

Snowdale missed the season opening 7-0 win over Cardinal Spellman due to injury, last week, but showed no signs of rust in week 2. He also recorded an interception on the defensive side of the ball.

Lady Skippers edged by Indians again

But JV team takes first win over Hanover in 13 years

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

With their minds burdened with the thoughts of the national crisis, the members of the Cohasset field hockey team were unable to overcome their strongest opponent yet in the early season.

Last Wednesday, Cohasset played Hanover, the only team to beat the Lady Skippers in the regular season last year. The host Indians took the decision, 2-1, in a somber, yet well played game.

"We were very quiet," noted coach Deb Bostwick, who is always proud of the high morale her team normally has. "I saw the girls, and they just didn't seem like themselves."

With 28 players carried on both varsity and JV, Hanover is once again considered to be among the state's elite field hockey contenders. Bostwick truly felt that hanging with them every step, and staying within a goal was a very good achievement.

"I am very proud of the team," she lauded. "We did very well in a back-and-forth, very fast game."

Gridders triumph in wake of disaster

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After a chilling moment of silence put a slight damper on the mood, the Cohasset football Skippers had the fans cheering from the opening kickoff.

Last Saturday, Cohasset triumphed over Arlington Catholic, 28-6, making this the second straight year they have opened their season with consecutive victories (they took the first three in 2000).

The night started with senior Liam Martin, who is out for the football season with a broken ankle, the late Clark Chatterton's granddaughter Kelsey, and the captains of both teams meeting at midfield to light candles and commemorate those who were lost in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. After the moment of silence, things resumed and the coin flip went on as normal.

And while Tuesday's practice was canceled, and Wednesday's was just a light workout, the Skippers showed no signs of rust. Also, none of the players seemed to be adversely affected by the tragedy.

"It was a nice release for everyone," offered Athletic Director Ron Ford. "We were able to forget about everything for a few hours."

Although the players were not distracted, fourth year head coach Tony Rolfe admitted that he and the rest of the coaching staff, especially fireman Bob Silvia, could not pay full attention.

Nonetheless, in his first varsity start, junior quarterback Mike Snowdale made the first of his two touchdown passes to junior wideout John Durkin.

Durkin has played a big role already in the young season, stepping up with the loss of Martin at wideout to become one of the primary receiving targets.

"Durkin has been filling in well for Liam," said junior tight end/kicker Tom Anderson of the speedy open field runner. "He knows the routes, and he gets there."

Anderson was perfect on all four of his extra point attempts, and has yet to miss one this year.

Sophomore receiver Chris Bilodeau caught a touchdown late in the game, to cap off Snowdale's outstanding debut (Snowdale even recorded an interception on the defensive side of the ball). Between the two starting quarterbacks this year, Snowdale and sophomore Mike Dooley, the Skippers have had three receiving touchdowns through two games.

"[Snowdale] is going to rapidly improve," stated Rolfe. "But I can honestly say that I have two quarterbacks that I have confidence putting in."

Complimenting the air attack has been a fast improving ground game, making this offense difficult to contain.

"That is a nice balance of talent they have there," lauded Ford. "They really stretch the field out."

The running game has been very strong this year, with a converted quarterback, senior Jason Brown, running for two touchdowns of 75

Bad luck haunts girls' soccer team

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

If it's not one thing its another.

If they're not hitting goal posts, they're seeing referees hand out penalty kicks like penny candies.

Sooner or later, the members of the Cohasset girls soccer team figures the breaks are going to start going their way. Up until now, however, it's been pretty grim.

The Lady Skippers have started the season 0-2, but the only indications that they've been outplayed to date appear on the scoreboard. Just about everyone who attended either the 5-2 loss to Norton or the 1-0 heartbreaker versus Mashpee might have a few opinions that run contrary to that disheartening bit of empirical evidence.

"We could be 2-0 just as easily as 0-2," captain Katie Grimm lamented earlier this week. "We were right there in both of our games. We hoestly don't fee lwe were outplayed."

The difference in the girls season opening 1-0 loss to Mashpee was a fluke goal. The Lady Skippers had several opportunities to punch home the equalizer, but post and bad bounces kept intervening.

The difference in the 5-2 loss to Norton on Monday? Three controversial penalty kicks being awarded.

Throw those out, and you've obviously got a very different story. At the very least, two pretty goals from Gillian Weber aren't overshadowed.

Does this mean the girls have little

Letting kids go back to play was right call

OK, maybe some of you will see this headline and think me unforgivably insensitive or, at best, hopelessly myopic.

But please, hear me out.

In the midst of a national nightmare that goes well beyond the scope of anything most of us could ever have imagined, and with so many of us fixated on our fantasies of fitting reprisals, it is vital that we all recognize it is the little things in our life that will restore reason and, yes, even lasting happiness.

The simple pleasures and little diversions each of us enjoyed before these acts of unspeakable barbarism (indeed, won't time for all of us who are living through this be separated into two categories from this time forward: "before" and "after") are what will ultimately bring us through this seemingly impenetrable haze.

Hugging your child, popping in a favorite video, playing computer games, sitting around with friends, surfing the net…these and many other things we seldom thought much about "before" will put us on the road to personal recovery.

For me and many others, involvement in sports — as a participant or spectator — will aid considerably in putting us back on that road.

As beneficial as this diversion is

Boys soccer team tries to get their edge back

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Sometimes the worst thing that can happen to a team is for things to come too easily—and that is particularly true early in the season. Exhibit 1: the Cohasset High boys soccer team.

In the Skippers first two games of the season—wins of 7-2 and 3-2 over Milton and Mashpee, respectively—things went pretty much as they dictated. According to head coach Dave Nigro, his troops moved the ball virtually at will and were given lots of room to operate—in other words, they looked every bit like the offensive powerhouse many South Shore League observers predicted.

Don't let the Mashpee game fool you. The Skippers out-shot the visiting Falcons 17-3, and missed repeatedly on golden opportunities to blow the game open while playing three-quarters of the game within 40 yards of the opponent's goal. Cohasset was simply hurt by a couple of defensive lapses that led to bad goals.

Greg O'Connell led the way, notching his first ever high school hat trick…for soccer that is (he had one for the Skippers hockey team this winter). Matt Bilodeau assisted on two of the goals, Dan Kinchla the other.

As it turned out, however, the difficulty the Skippers had in finishing the deal might have been a precursor of things to come.

The Skippers again looked to be the better team from the get-go of Friday's non-league match in Sharon, as Curt Kahn, Tim Baird and Evan Pestone all scored in the game's opening 10 minutes to give the Skippers a quick 3-0 bulge.

The Cohasset players relaxed a little bit after that, and before they could turn it back on the host Eagles matched and then passed that output before halftime. Though the Skippers had several quality opportunities late in the game, there was no goal scoring in the second half from either team, the game ending and five yards versus Arlington Catholic. His combination of strength and speed allows him to both hammer the ball into a pile on third and short, and break down field for long runs.

"He was even better this game than last game," said Rolfe. "His speed is instant. In two steps he is at full speed."

To help raise funds for the Red Cross, American flags were being sold for five dollar donations. A big thank you goes out to Wallace St. John for donating about 300 flags.

for all of us, it is even more vital for our youngsters, so many of whom simply cannot comprehend the evil that has invaded their world.

I know many of you did not agree with the decision to have high school athletes take back to the fields on Sept. 12 — "the day after." I, for one, did concur with this decision arrived at in individual cases by school administrators and supported by the MIAA.

A return to normalcy for our youngsters is essential. Why allow them the opportunity to dwell on all of this any more than they have to? What good could possibly come from that?

I did agree with the decision of Major League Baseball, the NFL and PGA for extended postponements of their scheduled play. Their activities are spectacles put on by adults specifically for our entertainment and for obscene amounts of money. Against this blackened backdrop, the triviality of this would have been so striking it would have likely tainted these ventures forever more. So it was a wise move, both from a sensitivity and business standpoint.

But high school and youth athletics are a different animal altogether — not only for the kids, but for all of us.

These venues provide smaller, much more intimate gatherings than the pro and college events. They allow us the opportunity to join together with familiar folks and show them, as they show us, that life will go on. These small displays of solidarity will go a long way for all of us.

One step at a time, we will all get through this.

with Cohasset on the wrong side of the 4-3 decision for its first loss of the season.

"I don't think we played all that badly," said Nigro, "even in the last 30 minutes of the half (when they surrendered the four unanswered goals). It just seemed like we pulled back on the attack a little bit. Now, hopefully, we know we can't do that."

One thing that clearly might have contributed to the loss of poise was the absence of Bilodeau, a team captain and arguably the central figure for the team's offense from his center-midfield position. The senior strained his back in the Mashpee game, and was forced to sit out the entire Sharon game.

"We're definitely a much more controlled team with Matt on the field," conceded Nigro. He quickly added, though, that this was no excuse for the let down.

"This isn't a one man team," he stated. "We have plenty of players capable of stepping up and taking a bigger role. If we're going to go anywhere, those players are going to have to step up."

The Skippers bounced back with a hard fought 1-1 tie in Norton on Monday that Nigro hopes is a step back in the right direction.

The Lancers play on the South Shore League's smallest field by far, and they almost always have a team well suited to these dimensions—with many big, physical players.

After 65 minutes of mucking it up, Norton broke the ice with 15 minutes remaining in regulation, beating Cohasset keeper Nick Spirito out of a scramble in front to take a 1-0 lead.

Nigro called a timeout not long after that, something he rarely does, in an attempt to rally his troops for one last push.

"I just thought I'd let them take a breather, get a drink of water and try to settle them down a little bit," explained the second year head coach.

How much of an impact that had on the game is up for debate, but Kinchla did tie it up a few minutes later, knocking home a rebound after a strong rush by Tim Baird up the left side.

"All things considered, I was happy to come away with a tie in this game," said Nigro. "Norton is never a fun place to play. They've always had a pretty good home field advantage on that field. I know we'll be looking for a better game when we get them on our home field (Oct. 9)."

As to the question of whether or not his players have worked the over-contentment out of their collective system, Nigro says he should get a pretty good indication of that on Thursday night when they play under the lights in Norwell against the same Clippers team that beat them three times by one goal last season, the final time in the southeast sectional semifinals of the state tourney.

"This game comes at a good time for us," said Nigro. "We should have no problem staying focussed from beginning to end in this one. The kids have been waiting a long time for another shot at them."

than two minutes to play. This happened when a scramble in front of the net resulted in the ball being tapped into the corner.

"If we could have held them there, it would have been a tie," said Bostwick, who watched her defense step up in the second half.

Cohasset came very close to scoring in the first half, when junior Lindsay Grossman drove a bullet at the Hanover net, only to be denied by the goalie.

"Lindsay hit it so hard, that the girl just turned her leg, it hit her pads, and the ball cleared past half-field," remarked the coach.

Bostwick was very pleased with the resilience her team showed, even after Hanover padded their lead to 2-0 on a breakaway by the right forward. Cohasset shot right back to score on a corner, this goal by sophomore Kelly Hurley, who is the only team member with two goals.

"I have seen a lot of improvement from her since last year," said junior captain Heather Peraino. "She has really stepped up. We need that."

At the JV level, the Cohasset squad defeated Hanover's sub-varsity, 2-1, making it the first JV victory over the Lady Indians in Bostwick's 13 years as a coach.

Junior Rachel Smith, who is one of a handful of juniors to help out the JV by playing one half for each team, scored both CHS goals in the win.

The other juniors who are swinging as a means of helping the underclassmen along are Sarah Brady, Mary Devaney, and Alexis Bugely.

"The older players down there are all good players," reported Peraino. "They are all serious about field hockey."

In the JV win, sophomore goalie Caitlin Condon recorded seven first half saves, and junior netminder Kristin Levigne had four in the second.

Both of the teams have opened up the season with solid performances in every game, despite the high percentage of lower classmen. This prompted Bostwick to really think about the great teams she seems to have for the future.

"We are coming along as a program," she started. "It is going to be our time soon." to be concerned with regarding their collective game?

Of course not, and Grimm is the first to concede the point.

"Right now, we're trying to figure out why we're having so many breakdowns in transition," said the senior.

Specifically, Grimm and her teammates are working to smooth out their movement of the ball from the midfield to the front line.

As a starting forward, Grimm has been frustrated by her lack of opportunities. It's clear, however, that she's not getting discouraged, just as it's clear she's not assessing fault.

"I really believe we just need a little more work together for things to start clicking," she continued. "We have the talent to play with just about everyone. I think we've shown ourselves that already."

Captain Maggie O'Neil, the team's lone returning league all-star, is undoubtedly the key for the Lady Skippers in the middle of the field. She played club soccer all off-season, and figures to be a force once the girls work their way through their present difficulties.

Girls soccer notes

Yet another bad break for the Lady Skippers is the season long loss of the third team captain, Carlie Carter, an invaluable defender the last few seasons. The senior had surgery on her knee Wednesday to repair an injury suffered during the winter gymnastics season.

Light and hope amid the darkness

FROM THE SIDELINES

JULIE ANN NEVERO

It couldn't have been more picturesque.

As evening fell at the Stoughton High football field last Friday night, the gloomy, overcast skies that loomed all day finally began to clear. The clouds broke and revealed a glorious and blinding sunset. As it descended, the sky burst into fiery red clouds and a rainbow appeared in the distance.

The symbolism of these images moved me to tears as I stood, candle in hand, joining hundreds at the field and millions across the country in a vigil during the nationally proclaimed day of remembrance for those who lost their lives in the terrorist attack on America. However, my tears were not those of sadness, but rather tears of pride. For while the fiery red sky symbolized the horrific tragedy, the rainbow symbolized our nation's strength to endure, our hope for a peaceful future, and our unity.

"What this nation has endured over the past week is something I hope we never have to go through again," Stoughton High principal Daniel Davis said prior to the kickoff of the Rockland/Stoughton football game. "I know I join you all in saying God Bless America."

A pin drop could have been heard while observing a moment of silence at the field on which Rockland and Stoughton football players stood grasping American flags and candles. When the Stoughton High marching band began playing our National Anthem, I was touched to hear everyone singing. Often seen as simply a pre-game formality, the anthem appeared to mean much more to people that night, and perhaps forever.

Similar ceremonies took place on football fields across the nation as people came together to comfort each other and tried to come to grips with last Tuesday's horrendous act of war.

Yet, while the tragic event provoked Major League Baseball, NASCAR, PGA, National Football League, and Div. 1A college officials to postpone their weekend sporting events, those at the high school level continued. While most high schools halted play on the day of the Sept. 11 attack, many teams were back on the field the following day – a decision that not all coaches agreed with.

"I'm not quite sure they should have played," said Ken Owen, Rockland High football coach. "I personally feel the MIAA should have stepped forward and put a stop to all of the games."

Marshfield High football coach Lou Silva agreed.

"I think they should have let the kids have a little more time off," echoed Silva. "I don't think they were ready to come out here and play. Their minds just weren't in it."

Still, while they may not have agreed with playing the games, both Owen and Silva said they were touched by their pre-game ceremonies.

"I think they (Stoughton High) did a real nice job with what they did tonight," Owen said. "It was the least we could do."

"We observed a moment of silence and sang 'God Bless America' before the anthem. It was really nice," said Silva. "The crowd was very respectful. You could hear a pin drop the whole time."

Resuming play hasn't just been tough for coaches, it's also been hard on student-athletes.

"It's been very distracting," said Hanover High soccer forward Liz Woodward, "and it's a little hard to come out and play because we all want to be respectful."

Teammate Maureen Halloran agreed.

"We're still the same soccer players, but it's in the back of your head," she said. "You put it back there when you're playing soccer, but it there's no avoiding it. After the game, you still go home and turn on the TV and see more sad news."

The student-athletes have really been an inspiration to me over the past week. I've had a difficult time going out and covering these games, but I can't even begin to imagine what it must be like for these young athletes, who still have to try to go out and win. Their courage has given me the strength to get back out there and work.

Many of the athletes I spoke to said their sport provides a good release for them. Since the attack, local high schools have been giving students the opportunity to use their classes as open roundtables, discussing the event and voicing their opinions. Message boards outside of the schools offer words and phrases of encouragement. At Norwell High, it's "Sorrowful but strong." In Abington, it's "United We Stand, God Bless America." But, after school, the athletes say they are looking for some sense of normalcy.

"We really just try to get it out of our heads," said Woodward. "We talk about it at school so much that when we come out here, it's our time to play soccer."

The events of Sept. 11 are something America will never forget. Indeed, the images and aftermath of the cowardly attack will be forever burned into our minds and hearts and the senselessness of it might not ever be fully understood. But in this time of tragedy, I, like many others, am drawing on the strength of our unified nation, where freedom still rings loud and pride is displayed in the stars and stripes we hang on our homes and cars and wear on our chests.

Stay strong America. God bless us all.

Extolling the virtues of a natural resource

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@WICKED.COM

The Weir River provides bountiful canoeing and kayaking opportunities.

But underneath the peaceful, relaxing scene lies a murky challenge.

"The Weir River is drying down as a water supply, which affects the environment," said Scott MacDonald, a member of the Weir River Watershed Association (WRWA). The WRWA is a grassroots organization with members in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

The group is hosting the first annual Weir River Awareness Day next weekend to bring some of the issues related to the river to the community's attention, while at the same time taking advantage of the recreational opportunities it affords.

A canoe/kayak trip along the Weir River from Steamboat Wharf in Hull to West Corner is planned for Saturday, Sept. 29, leaving Nantasket Pier next to Jake's Restaurant in Hull at 9:30 a.m. The event is being held in conjunction with the celebration of National Estuaries Day. The rain date is Sept. 30.

The Weir River is home to brown and brook trout, largemouth bass, sunfish, pickerel, eel, aquatic insects, blueback herring and rainbow smelt.

Those planning to take part in the tour should bring their own equipment. A two-for-one rental discount is also available at Harbor Cycle in Hingham. Call 749-1968 for early reservations.

For further information about the canoe/kayak trip, call Samantha Woods at 925-4690 or Scott MacDonald at 749-5572.

"We want to raise awareness of how to preserve these recreational opportunities and promote the environment as well," MacDonald said.

Earlier this year, the Hingham Water Resources Task Force recommended immediate action be taken to preserve the precious resources of the Weir River, which feeds into Foundry Pond.

Massachusetts-American Water Company serves the three communities included in the watershed association. Water company withdrawals from the watershed exceed the amount allowed by the state. The demand for water is expected to increase over the next two decades.

The average customer uses 112 gallons of water a day.

Norwell draws water from four wells in the upper portion of the watershed, which is a geographic area of land in which all surface and ground water flows downhill to a common point, such as a river, stream, pond, lake, wetland or estuary.

A recent study of the watershed, commissioned by the state, was undertaken by GZA of Norwell, water resource task force members and the WRWA. The four-inch thick report that came out of that study indicates the watershed is taxed in both its capacity to provide a stable public water supply and its ability to maintain adequate habitat for aquatic wildlife, which could eventually negatively impact quality of life.

Task force recommendations included:

• formation of a council made up of elected and appointed officials and citizens of Hingham, Norwell, Hull and North Cohasset — which are served by the 23-square-mile Weir River Watershed — and environmental organizations, water suppliers and state representatives. About 38,000 residents of those communities are provided with water from the watershed;

• development of a comprehensive watershed management plan for the overtaxed Weir River;

• educating the public about the issues;

• exploration of new water sources; and

• choosing appropriate ways to preserve the aquatic habitat.

The purpose of the WRWA is to promote awareness and stewardship of the Weir River Watershed.

The watershed includes Triphammer, Fulling Mill, Foundry and Straits ponds, the Weir, Plymouth and Crooked Meadow rivers and Accord Pond.

Among the tasks the watershed association is charged with are gathering data about the condition of the watershed using monitoring programs; designing and carrying out local projects to sustain and improve the natural resources, ecosystems, water quality and quantity, beauty and enjoyment of the watershed; reporting findings on the condition of the Weir River to the general public, government committees and other agencies; and building a partnership of schools, community groups, businesses and government entities committed to maintaining the Weir River Watershed as a "necessary and beautiful resource."

Reviving the Renaissance

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Bonnie Shapiro has accomplished a lot in life. She's a talented actress with a head for business. But beyond those skills, Shapiro is best known as the founder of the legendary King Richard's Faire in held every autumn in Carver.

A few weeks into its season which wraps up the weekend of Oct. 21, the faire is an event that has become a South Shore tradition, drawing visitors from around the state and the region.

"Once you walk into King Richard's Faire, you're transported to a different time, which is a good thing" Shapiro said, noting the event is reflective of the 14th, 15th and 16th centuries. "It gives people a chance to get away from today's craziness for a while."

It took a great deal of work to make King Richard's Faire what it is today. And for Shapiro, things have certainly changed over the years. In 1996, Shapiro lost her husband Richard, who founded the faire with her back in 1972 in Chicago.

"He passed away in 1996," Shapiro said of her husband. "He was a dynamic man."

In 1972, Richard was working as an actor while Bonnie studied journalism. The couple both loved the arts, whether it was dancing, singing, theater or film.

"When we got engaged, we both knew we were on the same wavelength," Bonnie said. Soon after that, the couple attended a Renaissance fair and decided to start their very own in Chicago.

"We were having a great time, and we were foolish," Bonnie quipped. "But we started it, and we really learned the hard way." The first year the fair was open, a tornado ripped through the grounds, but it was repaired. The couple ran the fair at the Chicago location for the next 10 years. Then, in 1982, the couple decided to branch out and open the South Shore location.

"We wanted to expand," Bonnie said. "We wanted to see what other areas of the country had to offer." She said the weather in New England is what really attracted them to the area, but they also viewed New England as a place with deep roots in culture and education.

The South Shore show grew and grew, but the couple was finding themselves financially strapped from running two huge operations in different areas of the country. Eventually, they decided to sell one of them, and so they said goodbye to their Chicago location.

"That other one still exists but it's under a different name now," Bonnie said. "The bottom line was that we wanted one of the locations to survive, and we chose the one in Massachusetts. Twenty years later, I'm still having fun." These days, Bonnie's business partner happens to be her daughter Aimée.

> King Richard's Faire founder Bonnie Shapiro

"She's my right arm," Bonnie said. "But I also have a wonderful staff." Bonnie said she spends the whole year preparing for the faire, gathering the best actors, musicians, and chefs money can buy.

"The faire is always a work in progress," she added. "It's never a completed thing because it's always changing." And although it is a highly popular event, Bonnie said King Richard's Faire has not grown into something that's too huge or too crowded. It's just right. She said about 200,000 people walk through the gates every year.

Shapiro said Faire-goers will feel as if they've stepped into medieval and Renaissance times by watching jousting, jugglers, different kinds of games and even magicians. All of the people who work at the faire are seasoned actors in costumes who look like and act the part of Renaissance men and women, she said.

"The event is held on 80 acres of pine forest," Shapiro said, noting only about 30 of those acres are actually used for the faire. "When you walk in, you'll meet some very funny characters who speak in old English dialect."

But it's more than the just the individual people who make the event as successful as it is. All around the fair grounds are fun activities and food sure to provide a taste of times gone by.

There are the jousters, dancers, singers and musicians who play the instruments of the past including harps, violins, trumpets and drums. There is an animal training exhibit featuring an exotic Siberian tiger as well as 11 other stage shows.

Visitors can observe authentic medieval craftspeople in action including potters, blacksmiths, wood-workers, glassblowers and mask-makers. In addition, there will be a number of craft merchants on hand selling their respective wares.

Don't expect ordinary burgers and hot dogs on the menu at the Carver festival. The Faire's fare includes two-pound turkey drumsticks, stuffed baked potatoes, corn on the cob, shrimp, fish and chips, pig sandwiches, and sausages. There are also plenty of drinks on hand, alcoholic and non-alcoholic.

"I know it's cliché to say but there's something for everyone here," Shapiro said.

"It really is a riotous, fun, family event where you can forget the rest of the world for the day," she added. "You just walk in and you're surrounded by talented people and great events. It really is a great escape.

For more information on King Richard's Faire call (508) 866-5391 or log onto www.kingrichardsfaire.net. Tickets are $20 for adults, and $10 for children ages 5-12. Children under 5 get in free. Parking for the event is also free.

Taking aim at guns

Cheryl Wheeler rolls into the Company Theatre

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

New England-based singer/songwriter Cheryl Wheeler has grabbed some national headlines in recent years, as much for her political activism as her music. While she may welcome the widespread exposure for herself and her music, she's likely also hopeful its particular circumstances don't overshadow and already long, acclaimed and multi-dimensional musical career.

Wheeler's song "If It Were Up To Me," with its title answered by the line "...I'd take away the guns," was a trenchant anthem more pro-gun control than anti-gun included on the singer's 1999 Sylvia Hotel CD, released on the Philo/Rounder label. A few months later, the song received unexpected and significant media attention in Colorado when TV, radio and newspapers seized on it as an anti-gun theme following the Columbine High School shootings in Littleton. Wheeler suddenly found herself thrust into a rather uneasy public spotlight. She performed the song at a Denver Handgun Control rally preceding a march to the site of the annual NRA (National Rifle Association) meeting, which many residents had requested not be held on a date only days after the shootings. But many others in the gun lobby misinterpreted the song's lyrics as advocating a complete ban on all guns and voiced their criticisms. In addition, the state school system used the song in an anti-violence promotional video without Wheeler's or Rounder Records' permission, adding some further tension to the controversy.

Fortunately, Wheeler made it through the storm and, while still a gun control activist, is now back to a career pretty much as normal, with a regular schedule of recording and touring. The singer's current road trip brings her to the Company Theatre in Norwell, for an 8 p.m. show, Saturday, Sept. 22.

For Wheeler, the brooding gun-issue musical commentary in question could bring more critical feedback yet, as recent tragic international terrorism acts against the United States have again sparked the public outcry for gun protection. But the singer's well-praised talent as a diverse and multi-faceted songwriter as well as engaging, emotionally ranging singer and performer should, among other things, offer listeners a welcome temporary relief from the hard times of recent days at her area show on Saturday.

That multi-facetedness and emotional range of Wheeler's songwriting covers a wide spectrum indeed. Picking from a plentiful source of original material in concert (including six previously released albums on Philo/Rounder and other labels plus many unreleased songs), the singer moves easily from songs recalling childhood and adolescence ("I Know This Town," "Music In My Room"), to the natural surroundings at her area home in Wareham, MA ("When Fall Comes to New England," "The Storm"), to intimate, deeply felt ballads about relationships ("Arrow," "Aces," "Silver Lining," "Mrs. Pinocci's Guitar").

But at anytime in front of an audience, Wheeler can then pull a complete about-face of emotion and subject matter with a choice from her wellspring of humorous songs, which often have a cuttingly ironic, slightly cynical edge. Some of the best of these include "Estate Sale," with the gleeful chorus "Going through dead people's houses/Wonderful things they have collected," the country-twangin' "Don't Forget the Guns," which urges to "get the kids and pack up the car...Bring the pistols, bring the ouzi and the old AR-15," and the anti-political right rant "Makes Good Sense To Me" - "Our contract here is well defined/With a stingy hand and a narrow mind." Other song titles simply speak for themselves, such as "Cow Pattern Clothes" and "Is It Peace or Is It Prozac?" A Maryland native, Wheeler began playing music at age ten and performing professionally by her late teens. After beginning her career as an original singer/songwriter in 1976, she was more or less discovered by singer Jonathan Edwards (of "Sunshine" fame), who invited Wheeler to join his band on bass and has subsequently produced most of her albums. Along with her own career as a recording artist, Wheeler has penned #1 country hits for Dan Seals and Suzy Bogguss and her own albums have featured guest appearances by Mary Chapin Carpenter and Alison Krauss among others.

Singer/songwriter Cheryl Wheeler will perform Saturday night at Norwell's Company Theatre.

"If It Were Up To Me" was written by Wheeler as a response to the Jonesboro, Arkansas high school shootings, which took place in 1998. Lyrically, the song runs through an exhaustive litany of the oft-debated causes of the dramatic increase in violence among children, and in society in general — "Maybe it's the movies, maybe it's the books...the bullets, the drugs, the Bible, the music, the TV, the lawyers, the prisons, the Senators, the system, the magazines, the internet, taxes, big business" and numerous others from the feasible to the ridiculous. But the underlying message is finally and obviously that the only logical solution is to keep guns out of the hands of unsupervised children.

More information about the song and its public and media responses, and more details about Wheeler's career, can be found at the singer's website at www.cherylwheeler.com.

No-Cook cucumber soup

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Cucumber soup may not be at the very top of anyone's soup list but a cold soup which requires only a few ingredients and no cooking is a recipe worth having. If I could only punch the flavors, this 10-minute recipe could be a real standout.

Most cucumber soups are made from raw ingredients including cucumbers, chicken stock, yogurt, garlic or onion, and assorted other flavorings (white wine, vinegar, Tabasco, dill, mint, radishes, etc.). The one cooked recipe I found (from James Beard) tasted more like chicken stock than cucumbers, others were too thick and yogurty, while still others were vinegary with an overwhelming blast of garlic. This is one recipe that needs a delicate hand in the flavoring department otherwise the mild flavor of the cucumbers quickly takes a back seat to the other ingredients.

My first test was to determine whether chicken stock was my only option to thin out the cucumbers. I tried water, half-and-half, and buttermilk and none of them worked. The water made a flat-tasting soup, half-and-half added an unpleasant dairy flavor, and the buttermilk was too sour and thick. Chicken stock was, indeed, the winner but I was careful to add just enough to avoid overpowering the taste of the cucumbers. This meant that a 3 1/2 cups of peeled, seeded, and diced cucumber was married to a mere 3/4 cup chicken stock. This was enough liquid to easily purée the cucumbers in a food processor and give the soup a hint of flavor. Next, I added 1 1/2 cups yogurt and gave it a brief spin in the processor. The yogurt and cucumber combined for a refreshing, soothing summertime soup. (Whole milk yogurt was my favorite since it is smoother and richer than low fat.)

I wanted to add additional flavors and textures to this simple base so 3/4 teaspoon salt and a bit of freshly ground pepper was a good start. I tried both cumin and coriander and neither worked since they diminished the soup's fresh taste. Almost all of the recipes garnish the soup with thinly sliced or finely chopped cucumber but I found that this addition was worthless - it added nothing in terms of either flavor or texture. I did find, however, that a great addition was finely chopped shallot. It gave the soup great flavor, a bit of crunch, and even a hint of color. (Finely chopped red onion or scallion are acceptable substitutes but their flavors are a bit strong for this recipe.) I also liked chopped radish as a garnish, an ingredient suggested in the "New Basics" cookbook. Other garnishes that did not make the grade included chopped tomato, pepper, and avocado. I also experimented with fresh herbs - dill was the winner with mint taking second place. As for vinegar and lemon juice, both were overpowering for the mild taste of cucumber. This soup keeps well overnight but it is better to add the shallot or radish and the herbs at the last moment for the freshest flavor and texture. It is best to make this soup on the day you plan to serve it but the soup can be stored in the refrigerator for 24 hours without great loss of flavor.

NO-COOK CUCUMBER SOUP

This soup can be prepared in just minutes but don't skip the garnish of shallots or radish – either adds both texture and flavor.

3 medium cucumbers, peeled, seeded and diced, about 3 1/2 cups
3/4 cups chicken broth, low sodium or homemade
1 1/2 cups yogurt, whole milk preferred
3/4 teaspoon salt
Freshly ground pepper
1/4 cup finely chopped shallot or radish
2 tablespoons finely chopped dill or mint or a combination

Place the cucumber and chicken broth in the bowl of a food processor. Process until the cucumbers are pureed about 1 1/2 to 2 minutes. Add the yogurt and salt and pulse for about 5 seconds or until just mixed. Transfer to a bowl, stir in a few grinds of pepper, and refrigerate until very cold. (The soup may be prepared a day ahead to this point.) Once chilled, adjust the seasonings with additional salt and freshly ground pepper if needed. Ladle the soup into chilled bowls or mugs and top each serving with 2 teaspoons chopped shallot or radish and 1 teaspoon chopped herbs.

Serve immediately.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full work agenda today. You can be most productive. It is okay to start new activities before 1:03 p.m., when the Scorpio moon forms a harmonious contact to Jupiter. Tackle jobs that need repair, research, study. You can gain key insights and find important solutions. Venus enters Virgo at 10:09 p.m., remaining there until October 15.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 21

Wake up in a good mood. An intensive Scorpio moon continues to generate a serious mood. The best way to channel today's energies is to work. You can initiate new activities until 5:09 p.m., when the moon becomes inactive. A Sagittarius moon at 7:02 p.m. spells r-e-l-a-x-f-. In addition, a lunar alignment to Venus prompts you to forget your troubles and go for the good times this evening.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22

A Sagittarius moon sets the stage for an upbeat weekend. This is an exceptionally favorable period for traveling out of the town or pursuing a new adventure. Keep it light this evening, however. Lunar alignments to Pluto and Saturn may bring up deep feelings, intense emotions. The Autumnal Equinox arrives at 7:05 p.m., when the sun enters Libra.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 23

The day rates high across the board, whether you plan to work or play. Today's planetary influences offer a last chance to initiate new projects before Mercury retrograde begins to take effect. If you are working, projects should come together easily, and you can get them out of the way in short time. People will be enthusiastic, friendly, cheerful. Get back in the swing of favorite sports. All social activities are highlighted. The Sagittarius moon aligns with Mercury at 8:32 p.m. and becomes inactive.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24

The moon enters pragmatic Capricorn at 2:48 a.m., urging you to take on a full agenda today. Hard work will pay off. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 5:31 a.m., signaling the full moon buildup until October 2, when it culminates. Business or career issues can no longer be swept under the rug. Now is the time to act. A rough spot occurs between 6:15-9:15 p.m., when the moon and Mars align. Sidestep arguments, power struggles with others. Know when it's time to call it a night.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25

A Capricorn moon all day urges you to keep your nose to the grindstone. You can be most productive. Zero in on promises, commitments you have made to others and formulate a plan to follow through. Be extra patient and focused. Maintain a positive attitude.

Prioritize your fall landscape projects

Part 2

By: Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

During this past week of tragic events and national mourning, it has been difficult for most of us to focus on our usual daily activities. So many routine tasks seemed trivial and inconsequential in the grand scheme of life. Numb with horror and grief, many of us have felt a compelling need to spend hours watching our televisions or listening to the radio, reliving the chilling scenes over and over again. From time to time we escaped the spell, only to be mesmerized, once again, hours later by the days and events which have changed all of our lives forever.

It was during one of these brief departures that, I noticed the negative impact our recent prolonged period of dry weather was having on my plantings. Limp leaves, wilted plants and shrubs, and crispy turf were all evidence of the need for immediate action. As I dragged hoses to refresh my parched borders, I paused to extricate an enormous weed. Lost in thought, before long this one intruder become five, then 10, and soon, a sizeable heap of weeds had accumulated, then another, and yet one more. As I hauled the interlopers to the compost pile, I was reminded of the many benefits gardening affords its advocates; it provides us with a time for reflection and serves as an escape from stress and the hectic daily lifestyles in which so many of us engage. Planting, growing and weeding offer us an opportunity to create a beautiful, tranquil setting in which to observe and enjoy nature, hear birds singing, and find peace. For so many gardeners worldwide, working the soil and nurturing plants are not only sources of relaxation, they are our salvation.

Geese honk from high above the garden as quantities of Monarch butterflies can be seen floating from flower to flower as they gather together to sip nectar and prepare to migrate to their winter home in Mexico. The chill, in the evening air creates a sense of urgency to begin the process of preparing the garden for colder weather ahead. High on this week's priority list is my determination to address the needs of my houseplants which were enjoying a summer vacation outdoors, to take cuttings of selected tender annuals to root, and to pot a few special tropical plants to grow and enjoy as houseplants indoors.

Any plant which has been growing outdoors should be closely inspected for unwanted pests that may be lurking among their leaves or in the drainage holes before bringing them inside. It is rather unappealing to discover sow bugs, worms, slugs or snails crawling about your home and many insects seem to target house plants outdoors as if they have a sixth sense, knowing that they have an opportunity to spend a comfortable winter indoors sucking the vitality out of our houseplants rather than face the harsh realities of our New England winters. One or two applications of a light horticultural oil spray will usually eradicate aphids, scale, mealy bugs, white flies, and spider mites. An occasional caterpillar can be removed by hand.

Unless you will be transferring these plants to a brightly lit greenhouse, it is advisable to gradually acclimate them to the lower light conditions generally found in our home environments. Even house plants which spent the summer in the shade received much brighter light than they are likely to find indoors. By moving these plants into a sunroom or porch, the gradual reduction in light will be less of a shock and fewer leaves will turn yellow and drop, although nearly all plants experience some leaf-drop or dieback as they adjust to lower light and humidity in our dry, heated indoor spaces.

Each spring I fill my gardens and containers with dozens of tender annuals at a considerable cost. During the latter half of the summer, while in their glory, I vow to propagate them in the fall to save a few pennies the following season, but each autumn, time seems to run out as cold temperatures cause their leaves to fall or frost turns their foliage black. Taking cuttings of many of these tender plants is one of my highest priorities this week.

Specialty coleus have become one of my many passions and root easily, especially if the stems are dipped in a rooting powder and inserted into pots of perlite or vermiculite. Multiple cuttings can be inserted into the same container. Many other trailing plants and tender annuals, including impatiens, can be propagated in the same manner. It is usually best to take short, two or three inch tip cuttings, preferably with at least one node; cut off the lower leaves and reduce the size of the upper leaves by trimming with a scissors to enable most of the plant's energy to be directed into making new roots. Be sure to inspect these cuttings for pests before bringing them indoors. Grow in bright light but out of direct sunlight, at least until roots have formed which tends to take several weeks. Cuttings will usually survive in perlite for months, but once well-rooted, they can be transferred to individual containers of sterile potting soil. Some of these plants, including ivy and vinca can be rooted in water.

Geraniums and begonias will flower all winter on a sunny windowsill. Small specimens can be lifted and transplanted into containers filled with potting soil. Bring a little of your summer splendor indoors to enjoy through the winter months.

Capital projects fill town's plate

Municipal properties rebuilt or upgraded

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Another Town Meeting, another capital project is staring the town in the eyes.

On Nov. 5, the fall Special Town Meeting will debate whether to begin the process of funding a new multi-million dollar police station. In April 2000 it was $41 million for the renovation and expansion of the middle/high school and Deer Hill School. Before that, the town agreed to build a new Osgood School. And let's not forget the two sewer projects, the James Brook Flood Control project, and a new Department of Public Works building prior to that.

Since the town decided to add a wing onto Cohasset Town Hall in 1991, the town has undergone a near complete capital renovation, encompassing its municipal buildings, sewer department, water department, schools and roads. But its debt for the various capital projects now stands at $93.8 million.

As many homeowners know, put off a project long enough, and a drip will become a pour. And after a near 20-year lull in capital projects within the town, the past 12 years have been hit hard.

"Unfortunately everything came due at the same time," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Not since the period between 1950-1962 has Cohasset seen this much money invested into capital improvements. That decade saw a minor expansion of the Osgood School in 1950, a new junior/senior high school in 1951,

Timing of work is top priority

James Brook, parking lot, train, need coordination

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

It's shaping up to be a busy next couple of years for Cohasset Village and the town parking lot.

Aside from a major overhaul of the downtown street-scape that is currently being planned, the area also gets to look forward to three major construction projects: The final phase of the James Brook Flood Control project, construction of the Greenbush commuter rail line, and reconstruction of the town parking lot.

And town officials are in the process of coordinating all three efforts so that, unlike in the past, the new work won't have to be torn up to do the next project.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he has received a lot of flack for the water commission tearing up parts of Elm and Summer Streets to refurbish the water mains, just months after the roads were repaved from last summer's sewer construction project. Even though Haddad has no jurisdiction over

Vets rally support for new American heroes

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"We pause to honor the new American heroes and pray for those who sail in harm's way."
— Robert Jackson, US Navy veteran

They may no longer be young, but they haven't forgotten. Cohasset veterans, who assembled at the harbor Saturday morning, remember well the sacrifice that war asks.

"We're here to honor those who died or are still missing after the tragic events of Sept. 11," said Steve Wigmore, commander of the George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118. "In my lifetime, I've seen a lot from World War II until what happened that day. It doesn't seem real that these things can happen, but unfortunately they do."

The legion planned the prayer and remembrance service for the last day of the national period of mourning following the Sept. 11 terrorist attack on America. Flags returned to full staff Sunday.

Standing in front of the veterans memorial that lists the names of Cohasset soldiers, who lost their lives in our nation's wars from World War I through Vietnam, local veterans paid tribute to those who may be called to action in the war on terrorism. They also remembered those who died or are missing in the attack on the World Trade Center and Pentagon and praised those who tried to rescue them.

The peaceful scene was in sharp contrast to the emotion of the moment. Flags representing the 50 states were waving in the warm breeze on the last day of summer and Cohasset lobster boats were at rest on their moorings in the nearby harbor. But as patriotic music blared, local veterans struggled to hold back tears.

"We feel safe here every day, but are we really safe?" asked Wigmore, who was driving to Town Hall and heard over the radio that a plane hit the World

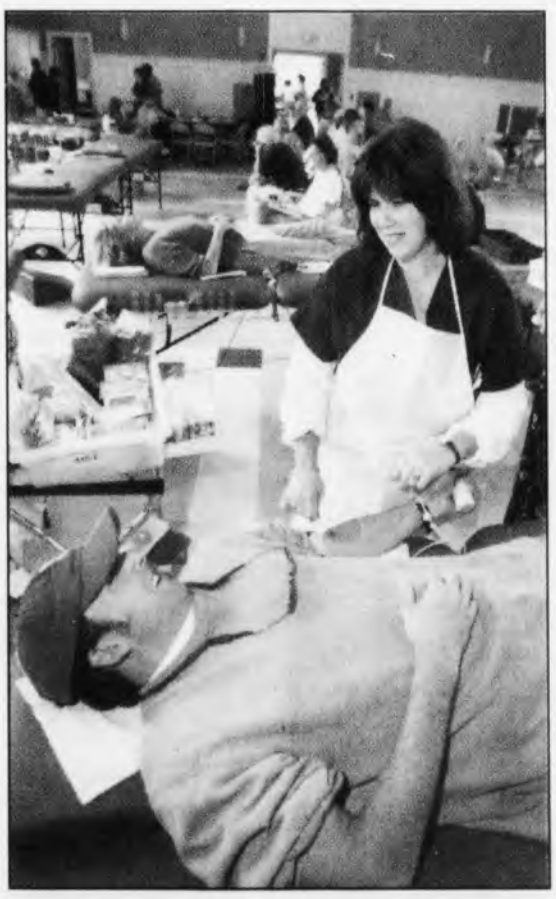
AfTA files anti-train lawsuit

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM



As promised, Advocates for Transportation Alternatives, with John Bewick at the helm, filed a lawsuit in Plymouth Superior Court Friday, with the hopes of forcing the MBTA to reexamine less environmentally damaging alternatives to the Greenbush commuter rail line.

"We have met every challenge so far, legislatively, legally and environmentally."
— Brian Pedro, MBTA spokesman

In its environmental impact report, the MBTA said constructing the $408 million Greenbush line is better for the environment and would attract more commuters than increasing commuter boat service, or implementing a feeder bus system.

But Bewick, who served as Secretary of Environmental Affairs in the late 70s, has slammed the MBTA's analysis of the alternatives, calling it biased and an "advocates' brief" for commuter rail construction.

Newport Creamery closes its doors

Leaves a void at the plaza

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Hungry area residents were still driving up to the Newport Creamery at Shaw's Plaza this week hoping to stop in for a grilled cheese sandwich or hot fudge sundae.

Slowly the cars pulled into the empty parking lot and swung around by the front door at the eatery's entrance where they discovered why there wasn't a single vehicle parked outside.

"Due to Newport Creamery's Chapter 7, our store will be closed. Sorry for any inconvenience. Thank you, the management," read a lime-green, poster board that could be seen through the glass door inside the vestibule.

Expanding its reach, the Rhode Island-based Newport Creamery acquired Bergson's Ice Cream about two years ago and opened in Cohasset at the former Bergson's site. It carried much the same fare and price range as its predecessor. The restaurant filled the gap between fast food, such as McDonald's, and more expensive establishments, and offered an alternative to pizza. It was popular with senior citizens and young families who could get a meal there for $20-30.

The company is in bankruptcy proceedings.

But due to financial pressures, the chain closed 19 of its under-performing stores last week including Massachusetts stores in Swansea, Worcester, New Bedford and Cohasset, which shut its doors Sept. 17. Twelve restaurants remain in operation as the company looks for a buyer.

Cohasset Treasurer/Collector Joseph DiVito says Newport does not owe any back real estate taxes but does have an outstanding water bill of $4,151 – money which the town will eventually recoup. It also owes $71.61 in personal property taxes on equipment, furniture and the like, he said.

The 2-1/2-acre parcel, which is valued at $752,900, is owned by the California State Teachers Retirement fund and also includes the driveway up to the building and

Selectmen evict Lobster Lab

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen, fed up with the lack of progress, voted Tuesday to terminate its lease with Kevin Ulmer and his Cohasset Lobster Lab proposal.

For the past 3-1/2 years, the town has leased the house on the former Hagerty Property off Parker Avenue to Ulmer for $1 a year, with the promise that it would become a maritime research lab for schoolchildren.

However, aside from an exterior paint job and Ulmer's insistence that construction was imminent, the project had remained mainly a concept on paper.

Last spring, selectmen gave Ulmer final notice that if he didn't provide a list of financial supporters and begin construction by Oct. 1, they would revoke the lease.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen Tuesday that he had left a couple of messages for Ulmer over the past week, and had not heard back from him. Haddad also said, he never received the financial information.

Even with a week until the Oct. 1 deadline, selectmen Michael Sullivan and Merle Brown said they had had enough.

"As far as I'm concerned it's gone," said Brown.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris suggested just waiting the extra week before canceling the lease.

"We gave him until Oct. 1, why not just wait the week?" she said.

"It's been three and a half years," argued Sullivan. "He has not even told us how he's funding this."

Selectman Thomas Callahan voted with Brown and Sullivan. Koed voted against revoking the lease, along with McMorris.

Ulmer could not be reached for comment as the Mariner went to press.

Osgood playground

Town Manager Mark Haddad reported that neither the Paul Pratt Memorial Library construction committee, nor the proponents of the children's discovery museum had plans to demolish the playground behind the old Osgood School on Ripley Road.

"They were under the assumption that we were going to do it," Haddad told selectmen Tuesday.

Selectmen, acting as the park commissioners, authorized that the playground be shut down out of safety concerns earlier this month. Haddad told the board last week that people had been ignoring the police tape around the site, and he wants to tear it down before library construction begins at the site.

"I just really want to get it down," he told selectmen again this past Tuesday.

"And I just really want to know how much it's going to cost," selectman Merle Brown responded.

Haddad said he will have the town Department of Public Works raze the playground, and find the cost of hauling the materials away.

Gas main work

Selectmen on Tuesday gave the go-ahead for Keyspan Gas to do gas main work on Cedar Street.

During a public hearing, Keyspan representative Francis X. O'Leary said the company will install 400 feet of two-inch gas main, from the four-inch gas main at the intersection of Cedar and North Main Street.

Village workshop open to the public

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation and the town's Village Revitalization Task Force will hold a Village public work shop on Thursday, Oct. 11 at 7:30 p.m. at the St. Anthony's Parish Hall at the corner of South Main and Summer streets.

Representatives of the Cecil Group, an urban landscape architectural firm, will give an overview of the latest village infrastructure improvement plans under consideration. Discussion will focus on a variety of items including circulation patterns, parking configurations, sidewalk designs, lighting amenities, and the conversion of overhead utility lines to underground service. The CRC and the town's Task Force are seeking community input as the designs reach their final stages of development.

The plans and design ideas are available for your review at the CRC office located at 87 Elm St., or a copy can be mailed to you upon request. For further information please call the CRC office at (781) 383-2449.

Sewer, traffic, taxes are some issues facing $43M project

Planning Board grills AvalonBay

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Location, location, location. The old realtor's mantra seemed to be the main reason why the majority of Planning Board members are against the 254-unit rental complex proposed by AvalonBay Communities for Route 3A.

Board Chairman Al Moore, and members Bill Good and Peter Pratt, also cited issues such as lack of sewer hook-ups, impact on municipal services, and pedestrian safety in speaking out against the plan. However, the board appeared to say that its feelings for the plan, which would provide up to 35 affordable housing units and help Cohasset meet its state-required quota of affordable housing stock, would be different if it wasn't proposed for one of the last industrially-zoned parcels of land in town.

AvalonBay representative Michael Roberts said his company has entered into agreement to buy the former home of Norfolk Conveyor — a 60-acre hillside across from Atlantic Bagel & Coffee Co. The development would be built using a comprehensive permit, which allows a developer to skirt local zoning laws, in exchange for dedicating a certain number of units for affordable housing.

Both Moore and Good said they generally liked the plan, but that feeling was overwhelmed with a desire to keep the land reserved for industrial or commercial use.

"If we had 100 acres located somewhere out in the back 40, I might say, 'Now this is something I might go look at for myself,' but this isn't the case," said Moore.

He pointed out the three previous failed attempts to rezone the land residential, saying it shows the town's desire to keep it industrially zoned.

"If someone wanted to build starter mansions up there, I'd find it even more repulsive," said Moore. "It's an inappropriate site for that kind of use, regardless if it's affordable or not. At the least that's where we have a problem with it."

Pratt raised the point that one of the potential after effects of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks in New York City is that businesses may look to move out of the city and into the suburbs.

"You're probably going to continue to see growth in towns like Chelmsford, and Billerica and Braintree, as opposed to downtown Boston," he said. "Most companies would love a little office space in Cohasset."

Good echoed Pratt, saying "I just don't feel the site is a right fit for the project. Recent events indicate there could be some good opportunities."

Because most of the development will take place on the front one-third of the site, Roberts did leave the door open for the potential of constructing a small office park on another part.

"Maybe we can give up part of the land for future commercial development," he said.

Pratt was also concerned with the amount of school-age children the project would bring to the town. Roberts said other projects his company has constructed averaged 10 children per 100 units, with that number increasing to 20 children per 100 in the affordable units. He said the company's recently completed project in Hull has six children per 100 units and estimated that the Cohasset project would put 30 additional children into the town's schools.

"It's an inappropriate site for that kind of use, regardless if it's affordable or not. At the least that's where we have a problem with it."
— Al Moore, planning board

Roberts said the project would create $400,000 in new growth, plus excise taxes from cars.

He also said he has had discussions with the town of Hull about connecting in with their sewer system. If not, Roberts said the company would have to look into constructing an on-site wastewater management facility.

Water Commission Chairman John McNabb said AvalonBay's proposal had "glaring deficiencies," in that it failed to show it was located inside one of the town's watershed districts. He also expressed his concern with ground contamination from previous owners and Cohasset Heights Limited landfill, located adjacent to the property.

He said he was concerned that because AvalonBay neglected to note the property was in a watershed district that the land "wouldn't get cleaned to the correct standard."

Both Moore and Good said they were concerned about the amount of traffic the development would add to Route 3A.

Roberts said AvalonBay is currently building a development off Route 20 in Marlboro, which is as congested as Route 3A, and that initial traffic studies didn't show the project would add a large amount of traffic to the highway.

The project also received opposition from Jerusalem Road resident Julie Guild, Nancy Butler of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce and, Ernesto Belo, a New England Regional Council of Carpenters representative.

Belo accused AvalonBay of unfair business practices, being anti-community, and claimed the company had a number of unhappy tenants in the Greater Boston area.

"They're only about the bottom line, it's all about the dollar for them," he said.

The plan did receive support from Planning Board member Chris Ford.

"I think we need more housing choices in town," he said. "It's starting to become an unaffordable community."

The project is currently being reviewed by the Massachusetts Housing Finance Authority, the first step in the comprehensive permit process. If the MHFA approves the plan, AvalonBay will then file for the permit with the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals. The Planning Board has no formal jurisdiction in the permitting process.

Nonetheless, both the board and Roberts said they hoped to work closely over the course of the project.

"Our regulations usually have a purpose," Moore said. "I know a lot of local boards tend to be power-hungry little devils that like to make people jump and hop, but I honestly don't think that's us."

Roberts said his company's goal was to "get approval on a project that we all agree with."

Roberts said his company has never been turned down by the MHFA and expects to receive a decision in early-October.

AvalonBay is a $5 billion company, with 40,000 rental units nationwide, according to Roberts.

some of the parking area on the west side of the shopping plaza, according to the assessors' office. Although tucked in on the hill by the plaza entrance, the parcel was not part of what Shaw's supermarkets owned when it built the shopping center. Last year, California Teachers Retirement bought the rest of the plaza from Shaw's, which is now a tenant like the other stores.

Bernie Rogan, Shaw's spokesman, said Shaw's got out of the real estate business to concentrate on the food retail business "first, last and always," he said. However, Rogan expects that the Newport Creamery site would be attractive for another establishment.

"We would like to see someone in there, but we have no control over that other than we are a bright, shiny face there," he said, explaining that potential tenants should benefit from Shaw's presence. Rogan hopes the bankruptcy doesn't interfere with getting a new tenant in there quickly.

Michael Warren, a consultant brought in by the bankruptcy trust to run day-to-day Newport Creamery operations, said the latest store closings resulted in the loss of about 750 jobs. He guessed the Cohasset store employed about 30 full-time and part-time workers. He said it is unlikely Newport will reopen the Cohasset store. Warren explained because Newport does not own the Cohasset site, if the landlord wants to lease the building to another entity, the process should not be tied up by the bankruptcy proceedings.

"Chapter 7 shouldn't affect that because we don't own the real estate," he said.

According to published reports, Newport Creamery filed for bankruptcy in June and at that time planned to keep 30 of its 43 stores open. The purpose of a Chapter 7 bankruptcy is to protect the debtor from its creditors. A hearing on the matter was held in US Bankruptcy Court last month, at which time company executives said Newport Creamery could operate profitably if it closed more stores.

But the Providence Journal reported last week that Newport Creamery is in dire financial straits and a US Bankruptcy judge appointed a lawyer as an independent trustee to investigate the company's finances and either find a buyer for the company or liquidate its assets. After hearing concerns from the investigator, the judge placed a temporary restraining order on the chain's owner, Robert Swain, to prevent him from draining money out of the business. Swain bought Newport Creamery in 1999 for $7.5 million.

AROUND TOWN

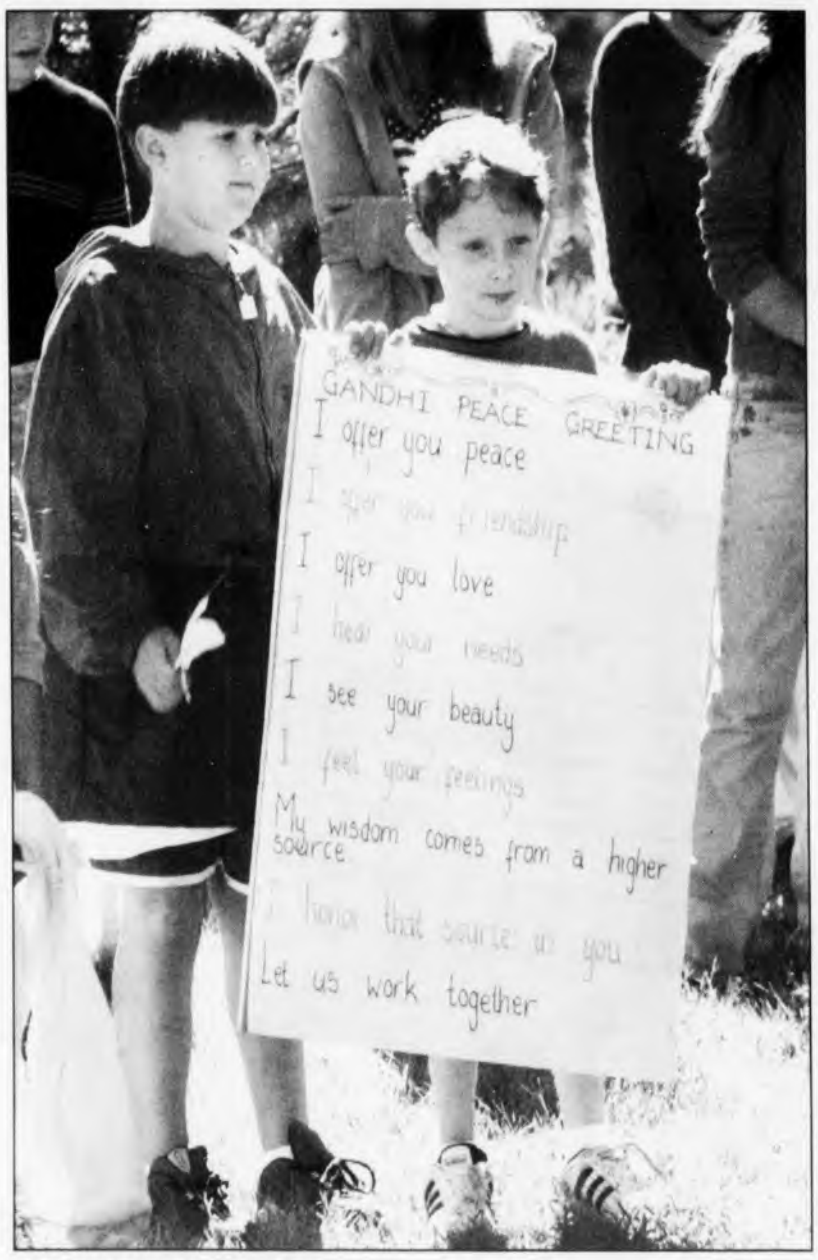
MANY EVENTS



Hello Cohasset. I hope this week's column finds all of you doing better and starting to move forward in the day-to-day things that life brings to us. It is still so hard for me to enjoy most things in the same way I would have a month ago but I know that we all need to go on and try. With October right around the corner, we have so many great events and activities that can be enjoyed with family and friends from apple picking, haunted houses and Octoberfests. Please send me all the information, pictures and notes of some of the things that you have done so we can all read about them.

BAYDAY AT ABBEY

One such event could be this weekend's BayDay taking place on Sunday, Sept. 30 at the Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham. The hours for this are from 11:30-4:30 p.m. and will include such things as Hug-a-Bunny, Pony and Cart Rides, Moon Walks, food and a wonderful $10,000 silent auction. The price to get in is $5 a carload and promises to be a fun and enjoyable way to spend a Sunday afternoon while helping to raise money for the Association for Retarded Citizens. Hope to see you there.

HARVEST FAIR

Another wonderful day to enjoy is on Saturday, Oct. 13 at the annual Derby Academy Harvest Fall Fair being held from 11 am-3 p.m. rain or shine! This is being held at the school on Burdett Avenue in Hingham. The entire family is bound to find something to enjoy whether it is a haunted house, listening to some great sounds from a favorite DJ, climbing the rock wall or many other exciting things to do. They will have the popular art tent and several tempting food selections, sure to please all palates. You can also do some shopping while you are there and purchase such things as plants and topiaries, home-made baked goods and used sports equipment. Admission and parking are free.

PEACEFUL THOUGHTS

YOUNG READER

We have a great reader here in town who won a prize for her hard work. Julia Canney, a second-grade student at the Joseph Osgood School, was among the winners of this summer's Mass Teachers Association Summer Reading Contest. Julia read nine books, filled out the postcard shaped like a baseball diamond and actually won four tickets to a Boston Red Sox Game! The night included a reception before the game at Staples Inc.(one of the sponsors). Julia attended the game with her mom, aunt and cousin, Hannah Rawson. A wonderful time was had by all, even thought the Sox lost. Congratulations Julia and keep on reading!

This hawk paid the Bells a visit.

NEW ADDITION

Very soon we will see another baby carriage wheeling through Cohasset and this one will belong to Tyler Raymond Berndt. Tayler was born on Saturday, Sept. 15th to Mom and Dad, Jeff and Kristin(Ellinger) Berndt of Scituate. Tayler weighed in at 7 lbs. 12 oz. and his very proud grandparents are George and Pat Ellinger of Cohasset, Ernie and Joan Berndt of Lexington and Marti and Dave Budding of Medfield. Congratulations to all of you on this wonderful addition to your family.

GIRL SCOUT LEADERS

We had a wonderful turnout last week at Girl Scout registration here in town and now we are turning to any of you out there who are interested in being a mentor to a wonderful group of girls. Adult leaders are needed for Kindergarten, first grade and fifth grade. You do not need to have a girl in scouting to help girls develop and learn the skills that they are looking for. It is a great way to volunteer and know that the rewards you will gain are awesome. If you are interested please call Terry James in the evening at 781-383-9173 or Nancy Bartlett in Dedham at 1-800-637-0070 during the day.

LOST EARRING FOUND!

I would like to thank the Whilton family for the wonderful discovery of the earring that I wrote about in this column. I had received a phone call about a earring that had a lot of sentimental value that had been lost at Sandy Beach. When I heard this, my first thought was, "oh what a shame, it can never be found in all that sand." Well, the power of positive thinking prevailed and Anne Marie Whilton gave me a call to say that her daughter had in fact, found an earring that matched the description on the same day it was lost! Thank you so much for taking the time to make someone's day, those are the stories that we all like to hear.

UNUSUAL VISITOR

Mark Bell was on the telephone with a client and walked into the kitchen area to discover a huge hawk perched atop the patio umbrella! Stumbling through the conversation with excitement and disbelief, as the hawk was only 10 feet away, Mark managed to get his camera out and snap a few quick shots, one of which he e-mailed to his laughing client!

"The more you listen to the voice within you, the better you will hear what is sounding outside."

No Place For Hate

Cohasset has not had any reported incidences of hate crimes as has been the case elsewhere. But just one mean-spirited misdeed is one too many in this beautiful town of some 7,000 people.

Sadly, neighboring Hingham hasn't been immune. A Hingham resident, who left a message on the Hingham Journal voice mail last week, reported a rock had been thrown through the glass door at his home. We could hear both the shock, anger and sadness in his voice. Another incident, reported to police, involved a business in town, which was also attacked by a rock-thrower. Both hate crimes appear to be the result of some perceived "middle-eastern" connection, either by the way someone looked or the spelling of a name.

As we recoil from the horror inflicted upon our nation Sept. 11 – we must keep in mind the blind hatred involved. We were targeted because we were Americans. Whether the victims were law-abiding citizens or innocent children – mattered not a whit to the terrorists.

Therefore, it would be a cruel irony for any of us to react toward someone merely because of their ancestry or name. Such senseless acts do a disservice to the memory of those who perished in the horrific tragedies at the World Trade Center, Pentagon and in a field in Pennsylvania.

With the exception of Native Americans — let's remember we are all immigrants in America. We don't lash out at anyone Italian because of the Mafia or anyone Irish because of the IRA, so let's not start pointing fingers at anyone from the Middle East or of middle-eastern descent solely because of their religion or where their families come from.

We recall a story from years ago about a little boy in the first-grade in a nearby town who was bewildered when the teacher asked the children where they hailed from. One child said, "I'm Irish." Another said, "I'm English." While another said, "I'm Italian." And still another said, "I'm Portuguese."

When it was the little boy's turn, he stood up and said, "I don't know about the rest of you, but I'm American!"

This is a good time to repeat the poem written in bronze on the base of the Statue of Liberty.

The New Colossus

These words by Emma Lazarus are inscribed in bronze on the Statue of Liberty, Bedloe Island, New York Harbor.

Not like the brazen giant of Greek fame,
With conquering limbs astride from land to land;
Here at our sea-washed, sunset gates shall stand
A mighty woman with a torch, whose flame
Is the imprisoned lightning, and her name
Mother of Exiles. From her beacon-hand
Glows world-wide welcome; her mild eyes command
The air-bridged harbor that twin cities frame.
"Keep, ancient lands, your storied pomp!" cries she
With silent lips. "Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore,
Send these, the homeless, tempest-tost to me,
I lift my lamp beside the golden door."

Thanks, Rick

Staff reporter Rick Collins will become a Cohasset Mariner alumni tomorrow. On Monday he starts his new job with the Statehouse News Service. Rick has "paid his dues" here and has done a stellar job of covering our town. We wish him well. For us here at the Mariner, Rick will only be an e-mail away. As subscribers to the Statehouse News Service, we'll be able to read his stories and will use those that pertain to Cohasset. So you may see his byline on the pages of the Cohasset Mariner from time to time. In the meantime, he deserves our heartiest congratulations on his new position. We wish him the best of luck and know he has a bright future ahead.

Christine Fitzgerald, administrative assistant, and Selectman Ronnie McMorris carry donated items from Town Hall to a waiting SUV for transport to the Salvation Army. More than 500 pounds of groceries and food was donated.

Coming together

TO THE EDITOR:

In the wake of the World Trade Center tragedy, the Salvation Army put out an urgent call for donations of supplies for rescue workers. Cohasset residents promptly and generously responded, and the Salvation Army asked me to convey their thanks and appreciation to all who donated as our contributions helped to fill their warehouses with these essential supplies. In addition, they asked that I communicate the need for financial support, as the Salvation Army continues to serve 100,000 meals a day to workers.

I also want to express my personal thanks to Christine Fitzgerald in the Selectman's office for all of her work with publicity and town hall organization; Fire Chief Roger Lincoln for his department's assistance with the collection; high school seniors Cara Foley and Suzanne Lynner for their help getting the flyers around town; and Mary Foley for her help delivering all of the donations to Quincy. My thanks also to Shaw's Supermarket for donating two boxes filled with work gloves.

As we cope with this terrible time in our nation's history, it is heartening to see people of all ages coming together with efforts both large and small.

Cohasset Common, a rare gem in today's world

MY VIEW

DAVID CROWLEY-BUCK

Nestled in the center of the small coastal town of Cohasset lies an area where the rules of time do not apply and where words like "routine schedule," and "pressure" are seldom mumbled by the astonished visitor. The only possible way of distinguishing between the 1700s and the year 2001 would be to notice the automobiles that pass by or the modern convenience of electricity. The Cohasset Common is that timeless area which stands today as a bridge between the old and the new.

Viewing the Common for the first time; raises the question as to why Norman Rockwell himself never thought to paint such an "All-American" location. At one end of the Common, the American flag waves majestically over the town, representing both a united past and an optimistic future. The pearl-colored pole upon which the dignified symbol stands towers so high that it would be easier to lie down in order to view the golden ball which crowns the top. At the center of the Common stands the First Parish Church, one of the oldest Unitarian churches in the United States of America. Its white color matches that of each and even other building around the Common. The uniform white bones with black shutters that surround the Common stand independently behind their white picket fences with special plaques, worn like medals of honor, on their front doors which let all who pass by know that the homes have stood for more than 200 years. On the other side of the First Parish Church, the green grass slowly dips into an oval duck pond. In the center of the pond, a stone water fountain releases its pattern into the air, inviting people to step out of their lives for a moment and experience New England.

At one end of the Common, the American flag waves majestically over the town, representing both a united past and an optimistic future.

The Cohasset Common is a center for activity and excitement in the town. It has been featured in Hollywood films and numerous television commercials. The Common is often an arena for a spirited game of Frisbee or touch football. The open lawns invite many sunbathers while the cool shadows of the trees invite those who wish to forego the embarrassment of being in a bathing suit in public. Walkers and joggers often stop on the wooden benches that surround the pond in order to catch their breath. The Common is also a political meeting ground as people caucus before entering the Cohasset Town Hall for a Town meeting or a gathering with the Selectmen. The annual Festival on the Common attracts local artists of all mediums to display their talent for an excited audience.

Although constantly alive with activity, the only changes that occur on its grounds come and go with the seasons of the year. In the winter, the common is often blanketed in snow and inhabited by snow angels, snowmen and small forts to protect against incoming snowballs. When the winter melts away the color green returns to bring a contrast to the completely white common. As time progresses, the trees bloom and the festivals begin. However, when the ducks begin to migrate south and the unmistakable New England foliage begins its transformation to reds, oranges, and browns, it is apparent that fall has begun and another summer has slipped by too soon.

The Cohasset Common stands as a symbol of the small New England town. Its white churches and open green lawn attract a multitude of people who wish to experience its beauty and "small town" charm. The Common is a haven for artists and writers who seek inspiration from its patriotic aura. The Cohasset Common offers a person the chance to step out of the modern fast paced world, if only for a second, and experience the charm of history alive and thriving today.

Update on the Master Plan for Cohasset

MASTER PLAN/Growth & Development Committee

This summer's Neighborhood Forum meetings underscored the interest and concerns about our future on the part of many residents of Cohasset. The Growth and Development Committee would like to thank everyone who attended these four discussions, a critical part of the Committee's effort to develop a vision and a master plan. This is a quick summary of what the committee has heard so far.

Background

For those unfamiliar with the Growth and Development Committee, we were chartered by the Cohasset selectmen to help draft a master plan which will provide a long-term strategic platform for the town's future. This plan is comparable to a strategic plan found in most towns, organizations and non-profit institutions. This will eventually guide future development and decisions about growth and transportation as well as infrastructure, education, and environmental protection. As part of this process, the committee has been interviewing various stakeholders in the town (town committees, organizations, residents, municipal employees), working with state and regional planning groups and conducting neighborhood forums and surveys. The following is a brief summary of the four brainstorming discussions conducted in July and August.

Neighborhood Forum Results

Nearly 100 residents attended the four forums. Facilitated discussions were conducted on what attendees liked about Cohasset, what they disliked, and their thoughts on the future. It was a great dialogue that spanned specific suggestions (add traffic lights at the intersection of Sohier Street and 3A), to broader suggestions (improve environmental quality). The following table summarizes the top likes, dislikes and individual visions for the future.

These forums were yet another step in gathering information to help build a vision we can all live with. And as you can see, there was no lack of ideas or conflicting points of view. It was quite evident that many felt that Cohasset was a community that they wanted to stay in forever. One participant said that it was one of the few towns on the South Shore with ocean access, a central village, a small town feel, great schools, and nice people. Many thought Cohasset was "unpretentious" with a strong sense of community.

Many thanks to Bet Baker, Steven Fusco, and Nancy Herlin for their terrific facilitation, and to Clark Brewer and Patti Keville for the extra effort in preparation for the neighborhood forums.

Neighborhood forum participants also completed a preliminary survey in preparation for our town-wide survey this fall. We will report on these findings and the upcoming town wide research in next week's Mariner. Please note that this is a small (but important) sample of the town's opinion. This work has helped us develop a final survey that will be sent to all registered Cohasset voters in the coming weeks. Please look for it, respond and make your voice heard.

Good old Denmark!

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Since I can remember my father talking back to FDR on our old Philco and Wally Berger playing center field for the Boston Braves I feel I am eminently qualified to take advantage of the latest development in health care.

No, it has nothing to do with any Medicare enhancement package enacted by the Congress, although several of the members would no doubt be willing to give it try; it has to do with a discovery in a Danish nursing home.

Caregivers at the Thorupgaarden Nursing Home in Copenhagen have found that pornography is better than drugs in calming elderly patients and they have been showing it on an internal video channel for the past three years with only one complaint.

Hot diggity damn! I knew I had a therapeutic reason for watching all those Shannon Tweed flicks after midnight on Cinemax! I haven't seen the calming effect yet so I guess I'll just have to keep on trying.

It has to do with a discovery in a Danish nursing home.

Lars Elmsted Petersen, spokesman for a Danish seniors group, says pornography is healthier, cheaper and easier to use than medicine, which is what Larry Flynt, Bob Guccione and Hugh Hefner have been telling us for years.

Even the Danish government has gotten into the act with a report reminding those of us who need to be reminded that sex is still a part of life for seniors and caregivers should be ready at a moments notice to provide it.

Good old Denmark! That's the place where George Jorgenson went to become Christine in 1953, leading to one of the truly great newspaper headlines of the Twentieth Century in the New York Daily News.

When Christine applied for a marriage license sometime in the 1960s, the city of New York turned her down and the News reported the story under the headline: "'53 Convertible Denied License."

But I digress . . .

Actually, pornography is on the way to becoming respectable in the United States, too, what with the subject being taught for credit at UMass-Amherst, MIT and the Women's Studies Department at Wesleyan University in Connecticut.

Call it Porn 101.

Hope Weissman, the professor at Wesleyan, requires her students to produce a work of pornography themselves for the final exam in her class, which is called "Pornography: Writing of Prostitutes."

English Professor Richard Burt, uses Shakespeare to teach students in his porn classes and MIT Professor Henry Jenkins has his classes analyze photos from Hustler magazine and clips from the film "Deep Throat."

"To not study pornography is to ignore a pervasive phenomenon in our culture," Linda Williams of the University of California at Berkley told the Globe (the Boston, not the National), noting that Hollywood makes only 400 movies a year while the porn industry turns out about 1,000.

Sorry. I have to close now. A Shannon Tweed flick is on Cinemax and I have to watch. It's therapeutic for us old codgers, you know.

HEALTH NOTES

On the lookout for water pollution

Volunteers can help

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Last week, your board of Health made its annual pilgrimage to the high school to talk to Mr. Buckley's class about community service. In this class, the students are exposed to many of the elements of town government, its workings, purpose and the relationship between each of its functions and the hierarchy of state and federal relationships. For example, the Board of Health represents the oldest state health agency in the country and is linked to the National Public Health Service. But in addition to explaining the many functions of the local board, we tried to give the students a picture of how they could help their many local agencies in service to the town. Examples were given of students collecting water samples to keep track of the safety of our town water bodies for swimming and fishing. And the assistance by students to our elderly by shoveling out paths to the sixty four elderly housing units behind the police station so that Meals on Wheels can get through to those who depend on the town for a hot meal, their major source of nutrition.

I have yet to see a volunteer effort that does not give as much to the volunteer as to his recipient.

What I fear was lost to these kids, however is the most important lesson: that their own personal health can depend on their feelings of self worth gained by helping others. I have yet to see a volunteer effort that does not give as much to the volunteer as to his recipient.

The Board of Health has engaged in promoting volunteer participation in environmental matters because if we can get more people thinking about their environment they will change some of the things they do which may add to an unhealthy environment. Sometimes our volunteer programs are a success, and sometimes they fail. I believe our efforts to heighten awareness about the relationship between lawn management and pollution in our water bodies has been a success. Similarly, the student water quality monitoring was successful from the standpoint that it got numerous kids really engaged in environmental assessment, and hopefully, they will go on to be environmentalists. But, in general, our water quality volunteer programs, although successful for the kids, have not met Town needs to gather pollution data on our water bodies. Accordingly, in the next few months, the Board will be asked to sponsor two new initiatives which, hopefully will give us much more information on the actual state of our various water bodies.

First, we will expand our planning for storm-water management. Storm water is surface water which runs off into our streams during heavy rain events. Studies show that roughly half of the pollution entering our streams occurs from storm water runoff during rain events. This will be an internal program, mostly funded by state grants and will deal with upgrading our catch basins and other storm water collection systems. Secondly, we are considering structuring an adult volunteer program, also funded by state grant money to capture data from our water bodies during rain events. These new initiatives, coupled with a continuing student volunteer program should meet both state and town water quality assessment needs. As these programs develop, we will keep you informed and probably ask you to be a volunteer.

COHASSET CARES

Fairness and resources must go hand in hand

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

First of all the Cohasset Recycling Committee recognizes the fact 101 townspeople have rallied around Pay-as-you-throw since July 1: townspeople see the common sense of the system as well as feel pride in the personal accountability or personal responsibility of PAYT that clear-headed people would. [Cohasset is now recycling about 35 percent of its trash. Nantucket recycles 80 percent) It's individual actions that enable a big world to function.

Now is the time for all people to think as hard as they can, first priority being the terrorist situation. It's a matter of life or death. We try to think of what is wrong.

Logic and evidence indicate there is a direct connection between how we use the planet's resources and the terrorist attacks.

Logic and evidence indicate there is a direct connection between how we use the planet's resources and the terrorist attacks.

The problem starts with the sense of fairness. When the basic concept of equality among all people is transgressed — when one person or group decide they need or deserve more resources than another person or group, conflict arises. What could be simpler - or more difficult, it has appeared, for humans. Other species, when left alone, seem not to have had this problem.

Oil has taken over from trees as the world's prime source of energy. Taking more than one's fair share of this oil, contributes to the degeneration of the planet and exacerbates international relationships.

A big question is whether natural resources should be locked up - sold - or not. As Daniel Quinn says in "The Story of B" a fair, equal, and natural use of resources is what has enabled tribal communities to exist for three million years While we agriculturists who have "locked up the food" are running short in the span of 10,000.

Our schools, especially, have a tremendous challenge - not with MCAS but with, of course, values. Right off the bat, our actions bespeak our values. As we remind ourselves of the quantities of resources used in the production of paper - for instance, from the oil used to cut down the trees to the oil used to haul off the paper [almost all of it used just on one side], we realize the common-sense urgency to use both sides, to collect and re-use paper only used on one side.

The present situation is more than just a throwback to World War II when we re-used and recycled as much as possible for the war effort, today is an international war—of values. Equality—freedom—justice—fairness—of people and of resources.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

LIBRARY CORNER

Are you ready for Bistro?

The Cohasset Library, along with the 25 other members of the Old Colony Library Network, will be switching to the new cataloging/circulation system on Oct. 29.

Bistro is a product of the SIRSI Company, one of the leading automation vendors in the country. Over 20 other library networks are using SIRSI systems, including the SAILS network in southeastern Massachusetts.

New features will include:

- More complete information about books, including book covers, summaries and reviews, where available.
- Many self-service functions, such as the ability to reserve a title and see the estimated waiting period.
- Customizing options for your library account.
- A special "kid-friendly" children's catalog.
- And, of course, at home access to all resources, including selected databases.

Beginning Oct. 29, staff will be available to answer questions and familiarize users with the new search screens.

Numerous capital projects are currently before town and the original construction of the Deer Hill school in 1955. The current joint police/fire station building was built in 1962, the same year nine additional classrooms were added onto the Deer Hill.

The late 1960s saw a major expansion project at the junior/senior high school, which added a separate junior high wing, and a new library and gymnasium and construction of the first town sewer system around Jacob's Meadow.

"People were really reluctant to spend a lot of money, they wanted to keep the tax rate down," said Jacqueline Dormitzer, who is currently engaged in authoring the third volume of the town's history spanning the past 50 years. "It was a conservative town that didn't spend money too freely. It tended to make due with what it had, and when the schools got bad and really became overcrowded, that's when they began to consider a building."

The town did undertake a massive public works project in the early 1970s, when it dammed the Aaron River and flooded part of Wompatuck State Park to create the Aaron Reservoir, at a cost of near $4 million.

"It was very necessary," said Dormitzer, "there had been a number of summer water bans."

But Selectman Merle Brown remembers that once Proposition 2-1/2 became law, municipal projects took a vacation.

"Lots of things got carried away," he said.

"The 60s and 70s were a very quiet time in town," Haddad said. "In the 70s things were still relatively in good shape, and in the 80s, Prop 2-1/2 put any project on the back-burner because of costs.

"Unfortunately, everything came due in the 90s."

The first debt exclusion override, which allows towns to exempt debt service for large projects from the tax cap limit, was voted in 1988 and allowed the town to spend $70,000 on improvements to the school science labs and $550,000 to build the transfer station. Subsequent overrides included three separate votes totaling more than $400,000 for school repairs, $775,000 for improvements to the town athletic fields in 1994, $752,000 for a new DPW garage off Cedar Street in 1995, three separate votes totaling $24 million for the sewer projects, and last year's $41.8 million vote for the Deer Hill and middle/high school project.

Of the current $13.13 per $1,000 tax rate, $1.03 is used to pay off the town debt accrued through the debt exclusion overrides.

However, some capital projects aren't reflected in the exclusion debt override tax rate. Construction of the new Bear Hill water-tank and the ongoing pipe maintenance project was paid for by water rates; the Woodside Cemetery expansion project, will be funded through the sale of burial plots, and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library construction project at the former Osgood School will be paid for through private donations, a state grant, and the sale of the current building. None of the projects will have an impact on the tax rate.

But the question is, whether there's a light at the end of the tunnel, or whether the town will face another round of projects in 50 years, and a sustained high level of taxes.

"We've updated all the schools, we've updated the DPW building, we're going to be redoing the town library, we're hopefully going to redo the police and fire station — what's left to do?" Haddad asked.

The answer could come in how the town maintains its new property.

"The town needs to make sure everything is maintained as we go along, and appropriate the funds wisely," said Jerusalem Road resident Leland Jenkins, a member of Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers. "Make sure we don't do half-jobs; that when something needs to be fixed, we don't rubber band it."

"It all had to be done," Jenkins said of the recent projects. "The schools needed to be rehabbed, but not to this extent. But there's no question the schools needed work."

Partially out of concern of the sheer cost, and partially concerned about the long term costs of maintaining the larger buildings, Jenkins and nine others supported a citizen's petition warrant article at the April 2000 Annual Town Meeting to instead spend $800,000 on the first-phase of a lower-scale, school renovation plan. It was defeated.

Jenkins' strategy of better maintenance is also backed by Brown and Haddad.

"My hope is now we can maintain things a little better, now that we have a maintenance department," Brown said. "I also think by having a town manager we now have better control on the day to day operation.

"Sometimes we can still put things off, but other things we can't because they're only going to cost more at a later day," he added, specifically pointing out the need for a new police station.

Haddad said he is working on a long-term maintenance plan.

"We've learned how to better plan and prepare for these maintenance issues," he said.

"The residents of this town have done an outstanding job in upgrading the infrastructure, and town officials need to make a commitment to maintain these projects so we don't have to do them again."

Bewick warned of an imminent lawsuit last month when current Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand deemed the impact report "adequate."

"Basically we think they need to restart the process, starting with the scoping of alternatives," he said this week. "They need to go back to ground zero. There have been faults from the beginning."

An AfTA release this week said a multi-modal public transportation system of buses and commuter boats is significantly more cost efficient, and less environmentally damaging — in direct contrast to MBTA claims.

In court, it would be up to Hingham-based AfTA to prove that the MBTA's impact report is deficient, but Bewick feels if AfTA can get a judge to hear the suit, that it has an "extremely strong" chance of succeeding.

AfTA has retained the services of Cambridge-based law firm of Anderson & Kreiger, which has drawn recognition through its successful defeats of a proposed prison in New Braintree, and proposed sludge facility in Walpole.

Bewick said AfTA is also considering filing an injunction to prohibit construction from going forward.

MBTA officials have said that they expect to have a contractor on board by December and begin construction next summer.

MBTA spokesman Brian Pedro said, as of 4 p.m. Monday, the agency had not seen a copy of AfTA's lawsuit, but that he was still confident in the outcome.

"We have met every challenge so far, legislatively, legally, and environmentally," he said. "We'll meet this one and go forward with the project."

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham — both train-opponents — support Bewick and AfTA's lawsuit.

"This is a guy qualified to weigh in on the issue and the process, given his former position," said Hedlund. "That combined with the fact that the law firm they have retained has a tremendous track record, there is a good chance the lawsuit could proceed."

Bradley said the lawsuit could shed some light on the method used by the MBTA to analyze the alternates.

"This lawsuit, whatever may come of it, may at least bring to the forefront the evidence and data used in the conclusion, which is important to review," he said.

Projects' timing is top priority

what the water commission does, he said the town has learned it needs to better communicate what projects are done when.

"Timing is crucial," Haddad said of the projects. "We want to make sure we have the drainage in the ground before they start the restoration of the commuter rail."

The final phase of the James Brook Flood Control project consists of replacing an undersized drainage pipe running under the town parking lot into Jacob's Meadow. The MBTA, as part of its mitigation agreement with Cohasset, has agreed to reimburse the town up to $1.2 million for the project. An article authorizing the town to borrow the money for the work has been placed Nov. 5 fall Special Town Meeting warrant.

Haddad said he included language in the article that would prohibit the town from spending the money until the MBTA starts work, in case the project fell through.

The MBTA has also agreed to reconstruct the town parking lot according to town specifications.

With all the work being done free of charge, all town officials have to do is coordinate the projects – something they have admittedly had trouble doing in the past.

"Coordination wasn't strong on Summer Street and Elm Street with the water and sewer projects," said Haddad. "I think we need to have better communication – better communication leads to better coordination."

Cost may not be a factor, but time is, Tom Gruber, chairman of the town's mitigation committee, told selectmen last week.

Greenbush is being built through the design/build method, where the contractor both designs and builds the project. One of the results is that construction can begin before the final plans are drawn.

"This is going to move very fast," Gruber warned.

MBTA Project Manager Jamie Jackson told Haddad that the agency plans to have a contractor on board by December, and start construction next summer.

That time frame is what prompted Haddad to put the article authorizing the town to borrow the money needed to do the work on the November warrant, instead of waiting until the Annual Town Meeting in April.

"It's crucial that that pipe goes in before work starts," he said.

On Tuesday, selectmen voted to unanimously recommend adoption of the article.

Cohasset pushes for Greenbush quad gates at crossings

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset's mitigation agreement with the MBTA about restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line requires the state to consider installing quad gates at the town's at-grade crossings, in accordance with federal safety regulations.

The Army Corps of Engineers and Massachusetts Historical Commission urged the MBTA to give the use of quad-gates "utmost consideration," in its Section 106 findings, especially in historic districts.

Use of quad-gates was even included in Environmental Affairs Secretary Robert Durand's acceptance of the MBTA's environmental impact report on the project.

However the town is still concerned that the MBTA is pushing forward with the project without sufficiently considering the use of quad-gates.

The difference between quad-gates, and the more-common segmented gates, is that four arms come down to fully block the road, thus preventing cars from swerving around the arms, in an attempt to beat the train across the tracks.

The MBTA has said it will consider quad-gates once regulations from the Federal Railroad Authority are handed out. However, the regulations, contained in what is known as the Swift Act, is currently held up in Congress, thanks to Speaker of the House Dennis Hastert, R-Illinois, according to published reports.

According to Selectman Thomas Callahan, Chicago-area trains currently have a waiver allowing them to operate without horns and without quad gates, and the Swift Act would remove that waiver.

Tom Gruber, head of the town's mitigation committee, said "Hastert is worried of the onerous expenses the regulations would put on the Chicago area, which has many more commuter rail lines than Boston," and added that "it could be a long time before anything definitive comes out."

"If we don't get quad gates looked into before next year, we aren't going to get them."
— Tom Gruber, mitigation committee

In the meantime, the MBTA expects to open bids for the $408 million project in October, and start construction by the summer. Greenbush is being constructed using the design/build method, which allows the contractor to both design and build the project. The result is, construction can begin without the project being designed in its entirety.

"The MBTA is on a very fast track," said Gruber. "If we don't get quad gates looked into before next year, we aren't going to get them."

At last week's selectmen's meeting, Gruber asked the board to step up the lobbying effort at both the federal and state levels, including letters to U.S. Senators Ted Kennedy and John Kerry, state Sen. Robert Hedlund, state Rep. Garrett Bradley, top state transportation officials, and the Army Corps of Engineers.

Callahan agreed with Gruber's urgency at the meeting.

"Let's talk to the MBTA now, because if they're going to change the rules, it's better before than after," said Callahan.

In order to provide a horn-less train without using quad gates, the MBTA would have to construct four-foot wide, 60-foot long berms at each grade-crossing to prevent vehicles from crossing over and zig-zagging through the segmented gates.

However, a number of properties around Cohasset will either lose land to make the road wide enough, or have access inhibited by the berm.

"It will just be incredibly intrusive in those areas," said Gruber. "And just about every crossing [in Cohasset] is in an historic district."

MBTA spokesman Brian Pedro said the agency is looking into using quad gates, but have so far not been convinced they are any safer.

"It's written in the mitigation language that we have to consider them, and we will do that," he said. "But I'm not sure how far along we are in the design process yet – we haven't even yet picked a construction firm."

Pedro said the MBTA did ask for an alternate cost for quad gates be included in the perspective contractor's bids.

He added that the MBTA conducted a trial period in Abington along the commuter rail line using quad gates, and "didn't find them to be an improvement" in the level of safety along the tracks.

But state Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Rep. Garrett Bradley disagree.

"It's something that should be done for pure safety reasons," said Bradley. "And it's something I'll continue to push [Executive Office of Transportation and Construction Secretary] Kevin Sullivan, and [House Transportation Committee Chairman] Joseph Sullivan for."

"I absolutely support the town's position and I think it's the correct one," said Hedlund.

Hingham interfaith program touched many hearts

Rabbi Stephen Karol speaks at the interfaith service held at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham on Friday.

By Polly Doggett
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The program offered that Friday night to a grieving community brought healing and hope to the hearts of the many who were present. Led by our host, Rabbi Steve Karol, the interfaith group of Hingham-Hull Religious Leaders sang and prayed and participated in a litany that would warm the hearts of all after suffering the most faith-shaking events of Sept. 11.

As president of this interfaith group, I was asked to welcome all to the service. As I looked out into the faces of those who filled the sanctuary and those seated way back in the cultural hall — possibly 300 souls — my heart gave thanks to these friends and neighbors who came together upon short notice to this special service. We were all brothers and sisters, all who loved our country, and grieved over the horror that had befallen it.

There was a oneness among us, a true feeling of brotherhood — Protestant, Catholic, Jew, and yes, a special guest, Mr. Samuel Hassan, invited from the Islamic Center of Quincy. Sam has devoted his life to serving his God and helping his fellowman. Although old and bent, he came forth to lend his full support. I had known Sam personally since first coming to live on the South Shore in 1954. His devoted wife, Peggy had been my very first friend here and her children played with my children. That was in another time, another place. And so it was with great joy that I found this dear couple in our midst once again under these very special circumstances.

We were all brothers and sisters, all who loved our country, and grieved over the horror that had befallen it.

Just before the service began, an older man popped up and greeted me warmly. It had been close to 20 years since we had seen each other. He was Gene Greenblatt of Hull, my old druggist/pharmacist in Cohasset. Gene was back in the days of the long-gone "corner drug store," and we had been such good friends in the past. Yet here we were, Mormon and Jew, meeting and rejoicing at seeing each other again.

Those of the Religious Leaders Association made an impressive sight amongst the congregation in their church vestments: the Rev. Ken Read-Brown of Old Ship Church; the Rev. Robert Edson of St. John's Episcopal Church; Rabbi Steve Karol, our gracious host; the Rev. Diane Mix of Congregational Church; the Rev. James Rafferty of St. Paul's Catholic Church; the Rev. Gary Ludwig of First Baptist Church; the Rev. Clyde Grubbs of Second Parish Church and his wife Marjorie, who with enthusiasm, led the congregation in singing one of the songs; Rabbi Ben Lefkowitz of Temple Beth Sholom in Hull; the Rev. Paul Peterson of House of Prayer; Mrs. Molly Larsen of the Church of Christ Scientist; the Rev. Victoria Gaskell; and Mrs. Polly Doggett of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormon).

At the conclusion, the association stood arm-in-arm on the platform and sang along with the entire congregation the much-loved song, "We Shall Overcome." It was indeed an evening of healing and hope. The strains of "We Shall Overcome" will remain in my heart forever. Praise be to God and may we remain true to Him always.

Polly Doggett is a Cohasset resident and member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

Stars of the Week

Tom Anderson

The junior wideout/kicker for the Cohasset High football team caught two more touchdown passes in this week's 21-6 win over Cape Cod Tech, and converted on all three of his point after kicks (making him 7-for-7 on the season). This ranks him near the top of the Division 5 Eastern Mass scoring leaders with 35 points.

Gridders keep rolling

Skippers stay perfect with 21-7 win over CCT

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset football Skippers continued their unbeaten season last Saturday, steamrolling past Cape Cod Tech, 21-7.

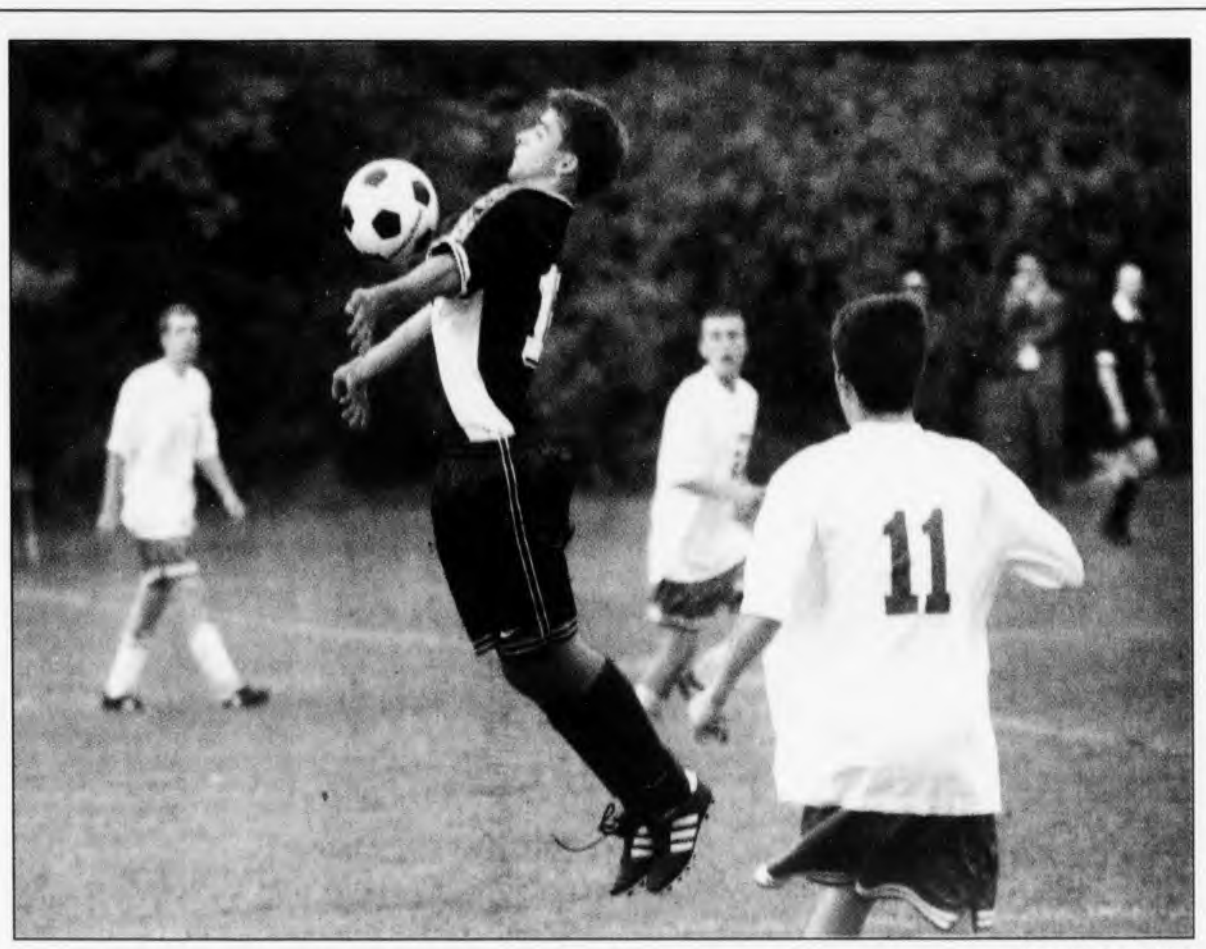
Allowing only two touchdowns thus far through three games, the Skipper defense was once again the story in this game.

Cohasset pinned down the Cape Cod running game up front, thanks in large part to senior linebacker Paul Previte, and junior linebackers Cosimo Cambi and Chris McKenna.

"They are tenacious and tough," lauded fourth year head coach Tony Rolfe of his linebacker core. He also went on to make note of how well McKenna and Previte make up for their smaller stature.

Continuing to stay among the team leaders in tackles, junior Ben Lynner contributed up front as both a pass rusher and run stopper. Lynner knocked the ball loose from the hands of the Cape Cod quarterback, leading to Previte's fumble recovery for a touchdown.

"Ben more than just knocked it loose," said a grinning Rolfe of the ferocious hit.



Defensively, the Skippers did a good job containing the passing game for the third week in a row. Senior Eric Libby and sophomore Chris Bilodeau protected against a high number of downfield attempts.

On the offense, junior quarterback Mike Snowdale threw two touchdown passes to junior tight end Tom Anderson. Coach Rolfe feels there has been improvement in his passing attack every game.

Mike Snowdale "is getting more and more confident," lauded Rolfe of his first year starting QB. "He is improving from quarter to quarter."

With the two touchdowns in this game and 35 points on the year, Anderson is now among the league leaders in scoring. Anderson also is

Frustration mounts for Skippers

Boys fall by one goal for fourth straight time to Norwell

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

It was a tale of two halves.

The end result, however, was all too familiar: relief for Norwell, frustration for Cohasset.

A Shawn Collins header off a of a perfect cross by Brent Pulsifer with 15 seconds left on the game clock lifted the Norwell boys soccer team past Cohasset, 2-1, on Thursday night. This marked the fourth game in a row the Clippers have bested the Skippers by one goal— going back to last year's three meetings, the final one a 2-1 triumph in the semifinals of the state tourney's southeast sectionals.

Cohasset, favored by many to win the South Shore League this season, came out the aggressors against the four time defending league champions, obviously looking to send a message.

The Skippers sustained a decided territorial advantage for most of the half, but could beat Norwell's returning league All-Star keeper John Conlan (11 saves) just once, that on a putback from Dan Kinchla during a flurry in front created on a nice play by Tim Baird to keep the ball alive.

Conlan came up with several big saves for the half, including a fully outstretched diving stop of a low bullet from Skippers captain Matt Bilodeau near the end of the period. Two other Cohasset shots late in the half sailed just inches over the crossbar.

It almost seemed as if the two teams switched uniforms during the halftime break, as the home-

Bad breaks haunt Lady Skippers

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Certain sports are said to be a "game of inches." But a game of minutes?

Each time out, the girls soccer team has competed well against their opponents for virtually the entire game. However, there have just been certain inevitable pockets of time where nothing seems to go the Lady Skippers' way.

"It seems every game we have a five to seven minute breakdown," said fourth year coach Deb Beal.

Most recently, Cohasset lost to the divisional opponents Norwell and Abington, each game containing a share of Skipper misfortunes.

Coach Bostwick tries to shape a winning field hockey program

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

After last year's magical campaign that saw Cohasset High's field hockey team advance to the quarterfinals of the state tourney, and the loss of 11 key players to graduation, coach Deb Bostwick knew she would have to adjust her expectations considerably this fall.

Now, instead of talking about building toward tourney time, as she was at this time a year ago, the veteran coach is talking about "building toward the future."

Monday's 4-0 non-league loss to Duxbury dropped the Lady Skippers record through six games to 1-2-3.

On the whole, Bostwick was happy with her team's performance against the perennial Division 1 powerhouse Green Dragons , and in particular with the work done in the defensive backfield by Suzanne Lynner, Jackie Goines and Frannie Noble.

"Jackie and Frannie kept us in the game with their drives out of our

Griswold-Johnston takes two riding championships

Diane Griswold Johnston did it again! She won two championships in a row.

On Sept. 1, at the 101st Myopia Horse Show, Diane competed on her Palm Beach Championship horse, Viking, her Selle Francais show jumper, competing on a grueling round of cross country four foot fences including telephone poles, stone walls, snake fence, log jumps and water, all tricky fences for a show jumper.

Viking, being an ex grand prix jumper, took all the jumps in perfect stride winning himself first place in the Medium to Heavyweight Jumpers, first in the Ladies Jumpers and First in the Equitation on the Flat— winning Diane the "Myopia Sporting Horse Champion 2001." Then, after walking Viking across Route 1A to the "Mini Prix" against all the professional riders, Viking held his own, winning a clear round over his four foot three inch obstacles. Unfortunately, a rail in the jump off reduced him to third place.

Again, on Sept. 5, Diane rode to victory at the Fidelity Jumper Classic (The Boston Jumper Classics) in Ipswich. Here, she com-

Cohasset's Celuccis join in the fight against cancer

Cohasset will have two residents raising funds for cancer research by walking in the 13th annual Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk, presented by MFS Investment Management, on Sunday, Sept. 30.

Ask anyone who has loved someone with cancer and they will explain: cancer is a family disease. From brothers and sisters to mothers, fathers, and grandparents, when cancer strikes one, it strikes us all.

Daniel and Judith Celucci have agreed to join the more than 8,500 people who know that cancer cannot be fought sitting down, and will take to the historic 26.2-mile Boston Marathon route to walk in the most famous hometown walk of them all — The Boston Marathon® Jimmy Fund Walk. The Jimmy Fund welcomes more walkers from Cohasset and thanks the community for its support in the fight against cancer.

Together they expect to raise more than $4.5 million for the world renowned Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, which treats adult and child oncology patients, and is the home base for some of the most innovative cancer researchers in the field today.

The 8,500 who will be walking in honor or memory of friends, family, co-workers, and child patients of the Jimmy Fund Clinic can't think of anything more important to do on a Sunday afternoon.

The Boston Marathon® Jimmy Fund Walk is the only event other than the Boston Marathon itself that is sanctioned by the Boston Athletic Association to use the historic route.

"Almost everyone you know has been touched by cancer in some way," says Emily Swymer, Walk director. "The Walk is a chance for people to do something... to take an active role in the fight to beat this disease."

Walkers may choose to walk the entire route from Hopkinton to Boston, walk 13.1 miles from the half-way point in Wellesley, or join Jimmy Fund Clinic patients and their families as they walk the final three miles in the Patient / Family Walk from the Harvard Medical School Quad, 200 Longwood Ave., to the Copley Square finish line.

Walkers are treated to a lunch party at Wellesley High School and a victory party at the Copley Square finish line complete with food, music, and a speaking program. Walkers begin in Hopkinton at 7 a.m., in Wellesley at 11 a.m., and at the Harvard Medical School Quad at 2 p.m. The heart and soul of this emotional and energetic event, the Patient / Family Walk begins as a party with food, games, and music for the children, and ends when hundreds of Jimmy Fund Clinic "Heroes" walk across the finish line behind a banner that reads: "We Are The Jimmy Fund."

Participants can register as a team or as an individual; each participant must raise a minimum of $100. Pacesetters, those who raise more than $750, receive special recognition from the Jimmy Fund, and are invited to a celebration at the start of the next Walk season. Participants are encouraged to form teams and walk in honor of those who have been affected by cancer.

"Every community can really make a difference for their family or friends by walking or supporting a walker," says Emily Swymer, director of the Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk. "The Walk is a proactive way for people to support cancer research and honor those affected by the disease."

The Jimmy Fund is a major fundraising arm of Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Over the past 12 years, walkers and supporters have contributed more than $18.2 million to the world-renowned cancer research center. Dana-Farber Cancer Institute treats people with both childhood and adult cancers. It is among the nation's leading research centers for all forms of cancer. The Jimmy Fund is the official charity of the Boston Red Sox.

Be a hero. Walk or support a walker. To register, or make financial contributions, visit www.jimmyfund.org. Contributions can also be mailed to: Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk, 375 Longwood Ave., 7th Floor, Boston, MA 02215. For more information, call 617-632-3562.

Learning curve

zone and Suzanne did a great job in front of the goal," said Bostwick. "There were some breakdowns too, but that's part of the learning curve."

Another lesson that has apparently yet to take root is protecting a lead. Twice last week, the Lady Skippers carried leads into the final minutes of games and twice they allowed their opponents — Middleboro and Scituate — to battle back for the tie.

On Wednesday, Bostwick's charges were 3:49 away from the win when host Middleboro punched home the equalizer.

The Skippers led twice in this game. Senior captain Abbey Coakley scored the game's first goal off of a nice free hit from Deanna Brown. After Middleboro tied it at 1, junior captain Heather Peraino scored on a nifty drive, the assist going to sophomore wing Kelly Hurley.

The Skippers carried a two-goal lead into the second half of Friday's home tilt with Scituate — Peraino scoring a pair, sophomore Danielle Pinkus the other — but the visiting Sailors potted two in the latter stages, the tying tally coming with just 2:30 showing on the clock.

"That was a little bit frustrating for the girls last week," said Bostwick. "We could easily have three wins right now, but learning to play with a lead is part of that learning curve too."

"Learning curve," as you may have discerned, has become a favorite catch phrase for the veteran coach this fall, and she applies it to all facets of her team, both on and off the field.

"If these girls want to be part of a winning program like we had last year, they're going to have to commit themselves like that group did," stated Bostwick. "To be honest, I have some questions right now about how committed some of these players are."

Understandably, Bostwick would not name names. She only said she would like to see team unity in general improve.

"These really are good kids I have, and a lot of them are working really hard," she continued. "I guess I just want it to become more contagious. I think this is part of the learning curve too, though. Hopefully, over the course of the season, we'll see an improvement in this area."

Bostwick pointed to the level of commitment displayed last week by Peraino, one of her few returning starters, who showed up to play despite suffering from laryngitis.

"That was a great example of leadership Heather set for the girls," said Bostwick. "She was a big part of last year's team so she knows what it takes. I don't even want to think about where we'd be without her right now."

peted over four days in the Amateur Owner Modified Jumpers Division with all four of her competition horses. Diane won first place on her French horse Viking on Thursday, second place on Viking on Friday and first place on her Oldenberg Mare Ariel on Sunday, winning not only the Championship but Reserve Champion as well.

Diane and both her French horses, King and Viking, had a very successful showing in June and July this summer after traveling to the Canadian National Horse Show in Calgary, British Columbia, competing in the Amateur Owner Jumper Division. After two weeks of competition July 4, Diane won not only one but two championships - one at the 3-foot-6-inch level and one at the 4-foot division.

She was the member of two teams competing in the Pris des Nations Cup, two perpetual trophies held permanently in the Spruce Meadows Championship Display Case. Team "Georgy Girls" consisted of four members: Mrs. Robi Greenberg from Far Hills, NJ, Donna Marki of Bedminster, NJ, Tracey Topping of Wellington, Fla., and Diane Johnston. Each rider had to have a clear round in the International Ring, with one to three 3-foot-6 jumps. There were 650 competitors.

Diane was again on another winning team— "Georgy's Hotcakes", where her teammates were all outstanding juniors, age 16, 18, 21 and Diane, respectively. Again this division had 60 competitors including the Canadian National Champion League. This was all achieved over a highly competitive 4-foot course, requiring not one but two clear rounds.

Norwell last Thursday, the hosts got the better of their guests, 3-1.

The Breakdown: trailing 2-1, and with a chance to tie the game in the second half, Cohasset senior captain Maggie O'Neill scored on a breakaway with a Clipper defender hanging all over her. Although O'Neill scored, and the rules of refereeing clearly state that advantage goes to the victim, Cohasset was awarded a penalty kick instead.

After a miss, the Clippers quickly jumped on the ref's miscall and scored soon after to give themselves a two goal cushion.

A bright spot of the game was junior forward Molly Flanagan scoring her first goal of the year. She finished second on the team in scoring in 2000.

One day removed from the Norwell game, Cohasset was dispatched by the female Green Wave, 3-0.

The Breakdown: occurring on the same day that rain canceled junior varsity field hockey games, Cohasset was slowed by the muddy field, and the extremely fleet-a-foot Abington team struck for two goals within four minutes.

The Lady Skippers clearly suffered throughout this game on defense, where they were without the services of three of their top backliners. Senior captain Carlie Carter is out for the year with knee surgery. Ailing junior defensive backs Maura McKenney and Julie Lordan will return to action next week.

With McKenney and Lordan out, midfielders were forced to move to defense. Fortunately, the midfield will be back up to full strength next week, something Beal said was very important to turning the team around.

While Beal has said that controlling the middle of the field is essential, she acknowledges that most of the goals her team has set for this season are not as concrete.

"When we met as a team to decide our goals, they weren't tangible goals," she explained. "They were more like 'we want to be committed to this team.' They are the little things that culminate in winning."

Frustration mounts for Skippers

town Clippers clearly began to carry the play right from the opening kick. This got one to wondering just what rookie head coach Jack Browne said (shouted?) during the 15 minute break in action.

"I just told them that we needed to get to the loose balls a little quicker," said Browne innocently.

"I give the kids the credit," the 14 year assistant to legendary Norwell High soccer coach John Osgood continued. "They're the ones who went out an got it done."

Speed appeared to be the primary advantage forced by the Norwell players in the early stages of the second half, with Norwell forwards Pulsipher, Matt Hunt and Jason Grier leading several hard pushes deep into Cohasset's territory, seeming to force Skipper defenders back on their heels. One shot by Grier near the five minute mark flew just over the crossbar past clearly been Cohasset keeper Nick Spirito.

Cohasset had one golden opportunity to deliver a backbreaker not long after that when a steal near midfield led to quick break-in, and a nice short distance chip by Skipper forward Greg O'Connell over the head of Conlan. It was Norwell sweeper Pete Donovan who prevented the score from going to 2-0, though, arriving just in time to boot it wide of the goal mouth.

It was a fast hitting Norwell push a few minutes later, 16 minutes in, that led to the game-tying goal.

Hunt got the angle on his defender coming in from the right sideline, and slipped a pass across as both the sweeper and Spirito reacted, giving Pulsifer the room to drill it home from 20 yards out with his left foot.

Norwell continued to apply heavy pressure, but Spirito held fast in net, going high near the 20 minute mark to pluck a bullet from straight out 25 yards away off the foot of Norwell sophomore Ryan Henry, and charging the ball aggressively on several occasions to break up rushes.

There was simply nothing he could do about the game winner, however. Pulsifer initially tried a straight-on shot from 30 yards out that was blocked. The quick- thinking Norwell junior collected the carom, though, using his body well to hold off a defender as he dribbled to the left of the net and lofted a perfect cross-crease pass to a hard rushing Collins, who got over his mark on the fly to head it back the other way just inside the left post for the winner.

"You couldn't have asked for a much prettier or dramatic goal than that," said Browne, following the game. "Brent really did a nice job of staying under control and making that play and I give Shawn a lot of credit too because he did just what you're supposed to do with that kind of pass."

Understandably, Cohasset coach Dave Nigro was disappointed with the outcome, but even more so over the second half letdown.

"It just looked like (Norwell) wanted it more, and that's why they won," said the second year coach, now 0-4 against Norwell for his career. "They got to the loose balls faster than us, and they worked harder.

"We had some opportunities in the first half. If we'd capitalized, it might have been a different game, but we didn't get it done. You can't give away chances like those to a team like Norwell."

The Skippers entered the game with several of its top players dinged up. Captain Matt Bilodeau had sat out the Tuesday's game against Norton with a back sprain, and O'Connell re-aggravated his own back injury early in the second half, forcing him to the bench for the remainder of the game. Sweeper Robert Hickey was also ailing in this game, clearly favoring his left ankle.

"We have a lot of guys capable of stepping up, and they didn't," responded Nigro, when asked about these possible excuses. "The bottom line is that Norwell just outhustled us, and there's no excuse for that."

Nigro was appeased somewhat by Friday's 3-1 win at home over Abington, particularly over the second half showing, in which goals by Bilodeau and Kinchla broke the 1-1 halftime deadlock. The other score came from senior Dave Krueger, his first varsity tally. The win improved the Skippers to 3-2-1 on the season (2-1-1 in league).

"Things seemed to click for us a little bit better in the second against Abington than they have for a while," said the coach. "We'll move on from there, and hopefully build on that."

Looking to cut down on O'Connell's running, Nigro moved him to sweeper in place of the dinged up Hickey for the game. He also had to shuffle a lot of bodies in and out to compensate for the loss to injury of his most experienced defender, senior Steve Laney. Sophomore Chris Clark played the entire game on the backline, and Nigro said he did "a nice job of stepping up his performance."

The Cohasset boys were scheduled to play Carver at home Tuesday night, but that game was postponed due to rain and rescheduled for Oct. 29. They next play on Saturday night at home against Harwich (6 p.m. start).

the Skipper kicker, and is a perfect seven for seven on extra point record this season. He also booted a kickoff into the endzone, a rarity in high school football.

With Anderson's kicking and very strong return and coverage units, Rolfe has been extremely pleased with his special teams.

"This is by far the best special teams I have had as a head coach," reported Rolfe.

Senior tailback Jason Brown is one of the main reasons the return game has been so solid. As the ball carrier, he floated up towards the 100 yard mark behind some very good holes produced by the offensive line.

"We had a marked improvement from last week," noted Rolfe, regarding his O-line. "We are going to go as far as the offensive line takes us."

What has also helped Brown is the nicely balanced offense, one that spreads out the defense. Twice in this past week, Rolfe had his receivers and quarterbacks stay later to practice, and he felt that the work paid off in Saturday's win.

With three straight wins to open the year, Skipper fans cannot help but be reminded of last year, where they ran into a brick wall in game four. After beginning 3-0 in 2000, the Skippers were beaten up by a Super Bowl-bound Carver team, and wound up the season 5-5.

This week, the Skippers have what could be another daunting week 4 task, taking take on Mashpee, a team that pummeled the Skippers 33-0 two years ago.

"We have got to have a clean game to beat them," Rolfe said.

Cohasset golfers win first match

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset golf team picked up its first win on Monday over league rival Carver, 7-2, at the Cohasset Country Club to move to 1-3-1 on the season.

Number one Cohasset golfer D.J. Silvia shot a match best 2-over-38 to earn the win over his Carver counterpart.

Pat Reardon, Matt Ogrodnick and Robin Murphy also contributed points to the Skippers winning effort.

The win was notched in the absence of head coach Torin Sweeney, whose wife, Rebecca, gave birth to the couple's first child on Saturday. Olivia Mary Sweeney checked into the world at just a little over six pounds.

C.H.S. Athletic Director Ron Ford took over the reins from Sweeney to record the win.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Post Prom Party planning

It is that time again to start planning this year's post prom party. Planners are meeting at the South Shore Community Center on Oct. 1, at 7:30 p.m. in the senior room.

All senior parents are encouraged to attend and sophomore and junior parent involvement is also encouraged. Anyone from the community with artistic, creative, or construction skills is also welcome!

A site is needed to store all supplies for the prom party. The high school is not available due to renovations. A large room for storage needs to be found quickly. It would be ideal if the committee could work there all year too.

If you have any questions or ideas call Mary Sullivan at 383-6666 or Pat Baird at 383-6997.

Monthly column to help our schools communicate

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Hello to all the staff, students and families of the Cohasset schools. This page and column is dedicated to all of us who want to have another way for communication to be shared about our schools. The page will be in the fourth Thursday of each month and all material needs to be to me no later than the third Friday of the month. This information and news can be student notes, important dates and upcoming events, photos, fundraising news and so much more. All the news can be delivered to me in several ways.

PHONE: 781-383-0143, press 2

MAIL: 622 CJC Highway

FAX: 781-923-1035

All photos may be dropped off at Cohasset News in an envelope marked, "Schools In, Cohasset Mariner."

I am very excited to develop and maintain this page as I truly believe that positive communication is essential to us all. I am also looking for all feedback, suggestions and ideas as we move forward to enhance the information shared in Schools In Cohasset. All items for November need to be to me no later than Oct. 19.

I want to take this time to thank all of the staff and support people for handling the news of our country in such a professional way. To have this support for us as parents and for the students means so much to us all. It is also reassuring to know that safety measures at all schools are in effect and that we are working together as a school community in the months to come. As always, our thoughts and prayers continue to be with the victims and the families involved.

METCO Host families needed!

METCO(Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity) is the longest-running inter-district voluntary school desegregation program in the nation. Thirty-two suburban communities participate in METCO. The Cohasset School System has been a host to Boston students for the last 30 years.

The Cohasset PSO organizes a "host family program" that matches Boston students with a local classmate. This year, they are looking for 10 new host families. If you would like to know more about being a host family or would like to be involved in this enriching exchange in any other way, please contact Lisa Dunne at 781-383-1596.

Fundraising programs

The gift-wrap program is coming to a close. Please turn all orders into the appropriate school on Friday, Sept. 28. If you wish to order any of these great items, you can call Karen Doonan at 383-2070

The Deer Hill School students will be out selling some yummy Little Caeser's Pizza starting on Oct.12. Make sure to find a Deer Hill student or, if you miss them contact Adrienne MacCarthy at 383-1028.

The high school will sell magazines starting on Oct.11 and the middle school will begin selling on Oct. 22. We all read magazines and this is a great way to do some wonderful holiday shopping!

Debate team

The Cohasset Debate Team is always welcoming students interested in current events and this year's topic is, "stopping the spread of weapons in mass destruction." Last year, the varsity team placed third in the league tournament held at Tabor Academy in March. The Eastern Mass Interscholastic Forensic League, incorporates the Towns of Cohasset, Foxboro, New Bedford, Scituate and Somerset. It also includes Bishop Feehan, Bishop Stang, Notre Dame Academy and Case Parochial schools. Tabor Academy is the lone independent school in the league. A variety of schools makes for good competition, that is for sure.

What is limiting the team is that each four-person team, also needs to send a judge to each of the five meetings in order to debate. There have been years where entries have needed to be limited because of the lack of judges. Any Cohasset parent or resident who would like to be a judge should get in touch with Mr. O'Neil at the Cohasset Middle/High School for more information, at 383-6100. This sounds like a fascinating way to keep informed in todays current issues and to hear what our teens feel about them.

Make A Difference Day, a day that is shared across America is being held on Saturday, Oct. 27. Make sure to watch for all notices and information sent home with your child and in the upcoming editions of the Mariner in the next few weeks. This day has such a tremendous value for so many reasons and in light of the recent events in our country, it will have so much more of a value in our society. Please mark it on all your calendars and date books and whatever the day has in store, know that you and your family can indeed, "Make A Difference!"

PAC to meet

All families with children who have a special needs issue with their children should make sure to mark your calendar for the kick-off meeting of the Parents Advisory Council, otherwise known as PAC. The group meets on the first Wednesday of each month and the October meeting will be held on Wed., Oct. 3 at 7:30 in the Osgood School Music Room. This is a wonderful way for you to ask questions, find the answers and know your child's rights. If you have any questions or comments, call Jamie Williams at 781-383-3075 or Allison Moskow at 781-383-9242.

BIG DIG BEGINS

Open houses a success

I would like to commend the staff at both the DeerHill and Joseph Osgood Schools for the exceptional jobs they did for the Open Houses held this past week. Both schools had such a positive feeling that was evident in the hallways, classrooms and teachers. Particularly touching to me was the effort put forth at both schools to honor and remember the tragedies that our country went through, in so many beautiful ways. At the Deer Hill, donations were given in exchange for a ribbon and at the Osgood School, awesome flags, wind socks and other Red, White and Blue beautiful decorations. I just want to thank all of the people involved for their hard work anddedication to our children and I am sure I speak for many!

JOSEPH OSGOOD SCHOOL PRIVATE

The Joseph Osgood School is off to a wonderful start of the school year. Under the direction of new school principal, Mrs. Janet Sheehan, the students, staff and parents have all adapted to the new school start time and developed a great routine in their day.

The PSO served a wonderful breakfast to the staff at the Osgood recently and it was so good. They had fresh fruit, baked goods, juice and coffee and lovely bouquets of flowers. It was enjoyed immensely by all.

Bus monitors have been in place for the start of the year and a special thanks goes out to all of you. Although their are still a few kinks that need to be worked on, the overall bus service is great. Dismissal and drop-off procedures are being adjusted as needed and with a little more time should be A-OK. Please contact the school office at 781-383-6117 with any questions or comments you may have.

The staff at the Osgood has done such a wonderful job in dealing with the tragedies that have happened in our country over the last few weeks. On Friday, Sept.14 at noon, a statement was read and the school had a moment of silence as part of the National Day of Prayer and Remembrance for the victims of Sept.11. After that, the entire school sang the National Anthem. Did you know that Francis Scott Key wrote "The Star Spangled Banner" 187 years ago on the day of our observance, Sept. 14?

Please make sure to watch for news and information on the Character Education Program. The topic for the months of September and October is empathy. The meaning of empathy will be explored through classroom discussions, bulletin boards, stories, quotes and take-home activities for families to do together. This fantastic program is a great opportunity to involve children, parents and staff in learning ways to develop character. Please encourage and work with your child at home, it does make a difference.

All emergency forms, medical forms and other important information should be returned to school as soon as possible. With the number of families in the school system, it is so important to take care of this right away in the event of an illness or emergency.

DEER HILL SCHOOL

All of the staff, students and parents seem to be having a great start to the school year and have been relatively calm amidst all the construction that is taking place. The staff have worked very hard in making the adjustments as painless as possible and Principal Mr. Paul Callahan has been instrumental in that effort. Please continue to help in the drop-off/pick up lines and follow the proper flow patterns. If everyone works together it makes each day a lot nicer for bus drivers, teachers and students to deal with.

Our sixth-grade students will return tomorrow from their week-long trip at Camp Bournedale. This experience is such a wonderful and memorable part of school. I remember when I was in sixth grade going to Camp Wing and it was super. I am sure that next month's school page will have some pictures and memories to tell.

Please remember to turn in all health and emergency forms as soon as possible. This helps to make everyone's job a little easier and smoother.

The PSO held a wonderful breakfast here for the staff on Friday, Sept.14. It was a great way to show the staff how much they are appreciated and welcome them all to the start of the 2001-2002 school year.

A few welcomes are in order to Miss Jennifer Gately, a new fourth-grade teacher and to Mrs. Donna Lowd who will substitute for Mrs. Suzi Corkhum while she is on maternity leave. Welcome to you both!

A call is going out to the residents of Cohasset for some extra rugs. If anyone has a rug that is hanging around without a use, why not consider donating it to the floors at the Deer Hill School? Also, if you happen to have an old sofa that needs a new home, the library at the school would be a great place for it. Call the office at 781-383-6115 for more information.

MIDDLE/HIGH SCHOOL

The staff and students at the Middle/High school have had a great start to this school year as well. So many programs, opportunities and events are happening and have happened that the students are exposed to many areas of learning. Make sure to read ahead and learn about a few of these opportunities.

A strong and cheery hello goes out to the new staff members at the Middle/High School. We will spotlight some of the new faces and people in upcoming school pages. At the High School, Penelope Brindley, a mathematics teacher and Nancy Hanson, an English teacher have joined the ranks.

At the Middle School, many new people have joined the staff.

Carolyn Crimmons, English; Jonathan Fortin, mathematics; Cynthia Gordon, social studies; Janice Rosenburg, science; Heidi Olson, Spanish; Richard Smith, technology; Kerri Ann Conley, Laurel Hickey and Kathleen Mirachi, special needs; and Laura Swartz, art. METCO Coordinator is Aleisa Gittens-Carle and shcool psychologist is Deborah Reutzel. Welcome to all of you and when any parents have the opportunity to meet these great new staff members, make sure to say hello and welcome.

Mr. Jack Buckley let us know about the Summer Institute program that runs in the summer and one of the wonderful adventures that they took part in was aboard the "Ernestina" a sail boat in which students went for three days and learned so much. , If you go to www.ernestina.org, click to enter and look on the right side of page where you will find the word, welcome. Find August 2001 and click on Aug. 18, 19 and 20! It is amazing and well worth the internet visit. The kids had a fantastic time and literally, "learned the ropes" of the ship, learned how to handle sail, climb aloft, raise sails and navigate. The did scientific investigations of the marine life in Vinyard Sound, plankton identification and otter trawls. It sounds amazing and a trip is tentatively planned for next summer during the week of July 24, 2002. What a great and worthwhile program for our students to do.

Another great opportunity was when 12 students from Scituate and Cohasset embarked on an adventure for nine days to study the Glacier National Park. The guide for this was science teacher, principal and former national park interpreter, Jude Chauvette of Manchester, N.H. The goal for the students was to learn the geology, ecology, natural history and human history of the Park and Waterton Park, Canada, the International peace parks. Students took part in hiking, camping, horse-back riding, educational center tours and daily classes on associated topics. This was the second in a series of four national parks that they plan to use as Summer Institute study sites. Next summers destinations are tentatively, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, Canada.

Another group of students involved in this institute program worked on the Little Harbor Water Quality Study, an ongoing project that began three years ago. Four students took weekly water samples from designated test sites and conducted microbiological tests, the results of which will be used by the Cohasset Board of Health to monitor the quality of water in Little Harbor. This project was funded in part by a grant received from MIT.

Learning definitely happens in so many ways and to have these kinds of wonderful opportunities in addition to the in school learning is awesome.

POLICE BRIEFS

Dangerousness hearing held on Cohasset man

A dangerousness hearing was being held yesterday at Quincy District Court as the Mariner went to press at which police requested Robert A. Paton, 40, be held without bail. Paton, who, as a condition of his probation was ordered to stay out of Cohasset and have no contact with his mother, was back in town and staying at his mother's apartment at 60 Elm St., police said. Police may also seek a warrant charging him with violating his probation, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

Police, while on routine traffic detail, spotted Paton driving his mother's car last Tuesday and checked to see if he was allowed back in town and was informed by dispatch that he was not.

After further investigation, police charged Paton with threats to kill, assault, extortion by threat of injury and disorderly person. Police said Paton has a history of abusive behavior toward his mother.

Mystery in Scituate

Novelist gives nod to South Shore town in new book

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

A new mystery novel aimed at the younger generation by Scituate native John Prophet pays tribute to the town he loves so much. As a matter of fact, Prophet will tell you the story actually takes place in a "fictionalized Scituate."

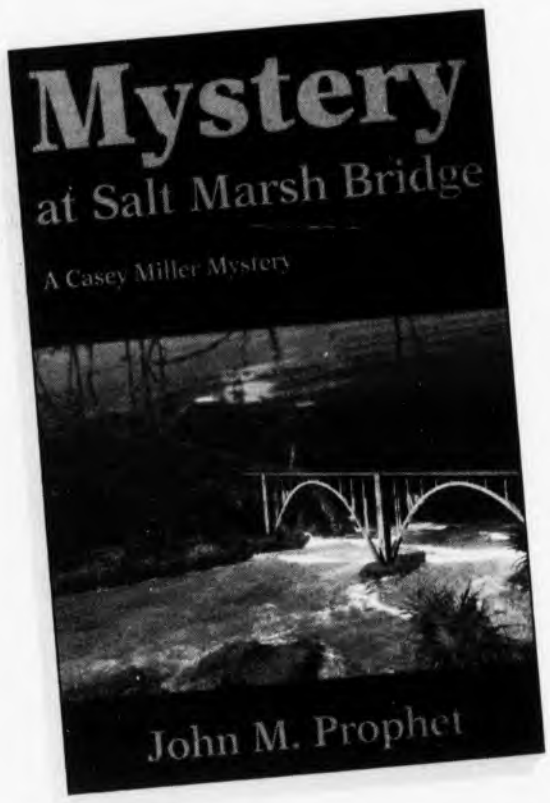
The book "Mystery at Salt Marsh Bridge," focuses on two teens trying to unravel the mystery of a girl from the area who mysteriously disappeared in 1898. The story is not based on actual occurrences, but even so, Prophet said his new book will provide young readers with some good storylines and some interesting twists.

"I never intended to make this some sort of historical novel," Prophet said. "And even though the book is aimed at young adults, I think everyone will enjoy reading it."

The two main characters in the book are Casey Miller and his friend Lexie. As the boy and girl team looks into that mysterious disappearance, they start seeing strange things happen. They begin to get death threats, for instance. The local librarian dies. They also stumble upon a cache of gold coins.

"It's not a very complicated story," Prophet said. "But when Casey and Lexie start trying to figure out what's going on, they find themselves in a bunch of dangerous episodes. With this book, I really wanted to show teens in a positive light."

Prophet, now 68, said he started writing "Mystery at Salt Marsh Bridge" back in 1994 when he was living in California. The first thing he wanted to do was find the perfect setting for the story, and he immediately thought of Scituate, the town where he lived for 30 years.



"I just think the area is so great," Prophet said of Scituate. "And the other good thing was that I was familiar with it, so I could be pretty descriptive in terms of setting a scene."

"I just think the area is so great. And the other good thing was that I was familiar with it, so I could be pretty descriptive in terms of setting a scene."
Novelist and Scituate native John Prophet

In order to establish characters for the book, Prophet found himself reaching back to his childhood days in Waltham where he grew up. Initially, he created two male characters based on two of his old friends, but as he thought more about it, he figured he should have one boy and one girl for the story.

When it came to deciding on a plot line back in 1994, Prophet was influenced by some of the scandals going on in the news.

"It seemed like there were a lot of cover-ups going on at the time," he said. "I didn't use the actual incidents I saw on television for the story, but cover-ups are the main themes of the novel. As I kept writing and developing the plot, I never knew how the book was going to end."

The book was finished in March and since its release, Prophet, who is now living on Cape Cod, has been getting a great response from readers of all ages.

"It was hard work," he said of the writing process. "The most difficult part was being able to stay organized. I've never written a book before. I used to be a stockbroker, so the things I read were a lot of financial textbooks. To put the book together, I had all kinds of writing guidebooks right next to me. I had something like 15 books on fiction writing." During the course of writing the book, Prophet said he also took a children's literature course.

But he has never been a stranger to personal writing. Over the years, he has written volumes of journals with funny poems and short stories. However, while he was writing his new mystery, he found himself overly-discouraged at times.

"My confidence was low when I was writing the novel," he added. "I never even expected to finish, and I never thought I'd be able to get it published anyway. I also didn't think I'd be able to accept too much criticism."

But Prophet was able to overcome those feelings, and in the end, he was able to self-publish his book through I-Universe.com. With that book under his belt, Prophet already has another in the works.

"The new book will have the same two characters," he said. "It's going to be called 'Body in the Marsh,' and it centers on an art-theft ring." He said his goal is to finish the book by December. He added he has the blueprint of a third novel in his head.

Nowadays, Prophet only has one problem. He can't stop looking at copies of his freshly-published book.

"Having it in print is like having a new baby in the house," he said. "I just can't keep my eyes off it."

To order a copy of Prophet's book, call (877) 823-9235 or log onto Amazon.com, Barnesandnoble.com and Iuniverse.com.

Badfinger's back

70s rockers headline at Vincent's Oct. 3

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

For those who still couldn't get enough at the time, Badfinger was the band that carried the Beatles' musical torch into the 1970s.Or so it seemed for a few years.

The phenomenal success of the Beatles during the 60s spawned legions of bands who were stylistic followers, and even outright imitators. But none could claim the genuine personal and professional Fab Four connection of Badfinger.

The British quartet was the first band signed to the Beatles' Apple Records label. Paul McCartney wrote and produced their first U.S. hit single, "Come and Get It," which highlighted the band's debut album, based on their soundtrack music for the Peter Sellers — Ringo Starr film The Magic Christian. From there, the group played on George Harrison's All Things Must Pass album and later supported the singer onstage at his benefit concert for Bangladesh. They also backed up John Lennon on his Imagine album and Ringo on his hit single "It Don't Come Easy." All the while, the band itself scored three more major U.S. hits — "No Matter What," "Day After Day," "Baby Blue" — and generated one more, "Without You," written by Badfinger member Pete Ham and a 1971 chart topper for Harry Nilsson and, more recently, a hit for Mariah Carey.

Apple Records proved a fabulous launching pad for Badfinger, but it also threw the band into turmoil when the label fell apart under mismanagement and confusion. Through the mid 70s and 80s, Badfinger experienced label switches, bad business deals, lost recording and publishing royalties, legal entanglements that delayed or halted album releases and less successful albums and singles that were released, all of which led to the depressions and eventual suicides of two band members, singer/guitarist Ham and singer/bassist Pete Evans.

Singer/guitarist Joey Molland eventually picked up the pieces and has sporadically regrouped Badfinger with various sidemen for club and arena tours through the 80s and 90s. Despite the pain and tragedy of the band's past, Badfinger and its music have maintained a strong, devoted following all along. Now touring as Joey Molland's Badfinger, the band is sure to attract many of its area fans once again when it pulls into Vincent's, in Randolph, for an appearance in the club's Wednesdays Rock! concert series on Oct 3.

"Badfinger did try to be pure about the music," said Molland in an interview quote to lead off the liner notes of a newly released Capitol Records band compilation CD, The Very Best of Badfinger. "I don't think Pete Ham wrote 'No Matter What' to make money out of it. I think he wrote it because it was a genuine song that he had," Molland said.

Badfinger with founding member Joey Molland (right), John Richardson and Mark Healey, will perform Oct. 3 as part of Vincent's in Randolph's "Wednesdays Rock" series.

Straight from the source, Molland's words probably best describe Badfinger's enduring artistry and appeal. The band's four major hits all reached the U.S. Top Ten in the early 70s for good reason. They were perfect car-radio, rock/pop hits with distinctive vocals, guitar hooks and production that simply jumped out of the speakers.

Badfinger released other singles, less popular but nearly as skillful and inventive. The band's 1968 debut single, the chamber-strings ballad "Maybe Tomorrow," was issued on Apple under the name the Iveys and became a British hit. Other songs such as "Name of the Game," "Midnight Caller" and "We're For the Dark" tastefully blend surefire Beatlesque pop hooks with artsy, English Reniassance folk-style production.

The original "Without You," first released on Badfinger's 1970 No Dice LP, lacks the radio-ready atmosphere of Nilsson's #1 hit, but features strong vocals by Ham and melancholy lead-guitar adornments. OK, but could Badfinger rock? Well, maybe not with the world-dominating abandon of Led Zeppelin or Aerosmith, but a riffy workout such as "Rock of All Ages" manages to kick out a trashy good time, and "I'll Be the One" even serves up a touch of harmony-rich, Eagles-style country-rock.

All of these tracks and more are included on the new compilation disc. Together, they offer an engaging portrait of a troubled but memorable career. More information about Badfinger can be found on the band's webpage at www.hollywoodandvine.com/badfinger.

Leaf peeping from on high

Blue Hills hosts fall foliage festival Oct. 6-7

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

The days are getting shorter.

The nights are getting colder.

Drew Bledsoe keeps throwing interceptions.

It must be the time of the year for fall foliage.

And this year local leaf peepers shouldn't rush off to New Hampshire or Vermont to catch the colors of autumn. Blue Hills Ski Area in Canton will be giving foliage enthusiasts a lift, literally. On Oct. 6 and 7 the ski area will open its main chair-lift to give visitors a bird's eye view of the turning leaves during its first Fall Foliage Festival.

"The festival basically centers on the beauty of the area," said Bryan Eckert, one of the planners of the event. "People will just be able to see the whole reservation from the chairlift, and they'll be able to catch some of the season's best views."

Eckert said he doesn't know how many people to expect this year, but he said the staff will be able to accommodate all those who show up throughout the course of the weekend.

In addition to having the chairlift available at the event for the public, there will also be plenty of refreshments and grilled food. There will also be a snowmaking demonstration with the facility's newest snowmaking machine which has a 150-pound water pump installed in it.

"It'll just be neat for people to see how that thing works," Eckert said. He added the facility's ski shop will also be open, offering plenty of pre-ski season deals.

Eckert said the new fall foliage festival was the product of a lot of recent brainstorming with Blue Hills general manager Dennis Byers and many other members of the Blue Hills staff.

On Oct. 6 and 7, the public is invited to take a chairlift tour of the foliage at Blue Hills Ski Area in Canton. The event is the first one of its kind at the facility.

"We all got together and decided we should definitely do something for the fall," Eckert said. "We all knew we wanted to capitalize on how beautiful this place is in the fall. When all was said and done, the festival is what we came up with."

"It gets so beautiful here. It's spectacular scenery."
Tammy Woodbury, Blue Hills staff member

"What better way to exploit our natural resources?," added Tammy Woodbury, another member of the Blue Hills staff who helped plan for the event. "It gets so beautiful here. It's spectacular scenery."

When the staff planned the event, they knew Columbus Day Weekend would be the perfect time for the festival, because many people go to Blue Hills anyway to do things like hike and take bike rides.

"We want to see how it goes this year, and then we'll probably try to expand it a little more," Eckert said. He added he and the staff would like to make the festival an annual phenomenon.

"I think people are just going to love being able to get around easily on the chairlift and see all the spectacular sights. There are so many different colors. It's breathtaking when you see it for yourself. Blue Hills is close and easy to get to. This will be a great way to kick off the fall season."

For more information call (781) 828-5070 or log onto Thenewbluehills.com. Admission to the festival is free, but there is a $5 charge for chairlift rides.

Folks who decide to join in the foliage festivities can either take a chairlift ride, or they can take a moment to absorb the glorious scenery on foot.

Farmstand tomato sauce

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Tomato sauce made with fresh farm stand tomatoes sounds simple, quick, and easy and produces a wonderful companion to pasta when tomatoes are flavorful, and local. However, many cooks overcook the tomatoes, draining them of their fresh flavor and texture, creating a sauce that is no better than tomato paste, a culinary faux pas when tomatoes are ripe and luscious.

First, however, I set out to test four types of tomatoes: canned, supermarket, farm stand, and those fresh from my own garden. When tasted both raw and in a tomato sauce, the grocery store tomatoes were slightly sour and not nearly as good as Muir Glen canned tomatoes. Both fresh varieties were wonderful. The conclusion? Never make a fresh tomato sauce with store-bought tomatoes - either buy them fresh locally or use canned. (The latter, however, lacks the bold, rich flavor of just-picked garden tomatoes.)

The next question was whether the tomatoes had to be skinned and seeded. I made a batch of sauce using peeled tomatoes, a batch using peeled and seeded tomatoes, and one with tomatoes that were not seeded or peeled. Unfortunately, the skinned and seeded tomatoes were the winner. When cooked, tomato skin curls up which is unattractive and it tastes papery. The good news is that skinned tomatoes cook faster, in about 10 minutes instead of 15. Using a sharp peeler (I like the Oxo model), I found that tomatoes can be peeled just like an apple. If you don't have a sharp peeler, you can make a cross-hatch cut in one end and plunge the tomatoes into boiling water for 30 seconds. For my money, I find this process too much work for a simple sauce so either use a good peeler or live with the skins. The seeds are quickly removed by cutting the tomatoes in half through the equator, holding one half firmly, and throwing the tomato away from you (don't let go) with a quick jerking motion. The seeds and liquid will fly right out. (I prefer plum tomatoes for this recipe since they have fewer seeds and are less watery.) For this recipe, I preferred a half-inch dice once the tomatoes are peeled and seeded for a quick-cooking but chunky sauce.

Many folks muck up a good fresh tomato sauce with too many ingredients. Having tested scores of recipes, I have come to the conclusion that olive oil, garlic, fresh basil, and salt are all that is necessary to complement quick-cooked tomatoes. I prefer the garlic pressed, not diced, since it produces better flavor and diced garlic is more likely to burn. Heating two tablespoons of olive oil in a large skillet, I found that the garlic is best when cooked only one minute. You want to remove the harsh, raw garlic flavor without losing its fresh flavor. The tomatoes needed 1/2 teaspoon of salt to bring out their best flavor. To finish, I added 10 or so ripped fresh basil leaves, about 3 tablespoons, and also finished the sauce with one tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil. (As a general rule when making sauces using olive oil, it is best to reserve some of the oil until the very last minute in order to preserve its fresh taste.) I found cooking the tomato sauce in a large skillet minimizes the time it takes for the tomatoes to break down and the sauce to thicken. The final touch is to add the cooked, drained pasta to the skillet and cook the sauce with the pasta for just a minute. If necessary, a bit of the pasta water (always reserve a cup or so) can be added to thin out or stretch the sauce to coat the pasta. Finally, for a quick variation, I add 1/4 teaspoon crushed red pepper flakes to the olive oil along with the garlic.

FRESH AND QUICK SKILLET TOMATO SAUCE

Peeling and seeding the tomatoes is an important step. The easiest method is to use a very sharp peeler such as the Oxo brand although tomatoes can also be boiled for 30 seconds and then placed into ice water. The outer skin will then come off easily.

3 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil
2 medium garlic cloves, preferably pressed (or minced)
2 pounds (8 to 10 medium) garden fresh ripe tomatoes, peeled, seeded, and cut into 1/2 inch pieces
1/2 teaspoon salt or to taste
3 tablespoons (about 10 leaves) fresh basil ripped into pieces or roughly chopped Italian parsley
1 pound pasta

1. Heat 2 tablespoons oil in a 10-inch skillet or sauté pan over medium heat. Add the garlic and cook for 1 minute or until fragrant but not browned. Stir in the tomatoes and salt and increase the heat to medium high. Cook until the tomatoes have broken down and the liquid has thickened to form a sauce, about 10 minutes. Add the basil or parsley.

2. Meanwhile, bring 4 quarts of water to a boil over high heat. Add 1 tablespoon of salt and 1 pound of pasta to the water and cook until al dente (start checking about 4 minutes before the package directions). Drain, reserving 1 cup pasta cooking water. Add the pasta and remaining tablespoon olive oil to the skillet. (If you don't think the skillet is large enough to hold the pasta you may add the pasta and sauce back into the pasta pot.) Reduce the heat to low and toss the pasta and sauce for 1 minute adding some of the reserved water, if necessary, to thin out the sauce. Serve immediately with Parmesan cheese and freshly ground black pepper.

SPICE FRESH TOMATO SAUCE

Add 1/4 teaspoon (or to taste) red pepper flakes to the olive oil along with the garlic.

Fall-blooming favorites for the mixed perennial border

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the month of September draws to a close and the days grow shorter with the passing of the autumnal equinox, even the most meticulously maintained perennial borders tend to lose their overall, tidy appearance. Many plants seem to flop and sprawl as they don their varied autumn tints. My eloquent friend, Sydney Eddison, garden writer and lecturer extraordinaire, likens the appearance of the fall perennial garden to a "proper lady removing her girdle," a portrait which ideally describes the transition of our gardens during the fall season. Even the most stalwart, upright plants are inclined to relax as they prepare for their winter's nap after a long season of colorful splendor.

The perennial garden in autumn is not without its star performers, with daisy-like flowers leading the parade. In the sunny border, billowing clouds of tiny white daisies glow across the landscape on the perfectly upright, 4-foot tall, blue-green stems of Boltonia "Snowbank," a hardy perennial which seems to thrive in nearly any soil. Hardy asters offer a wide range of colorful daisies ranging in height from 6-inch dwarfs to 6-foot giants. Flowers may be pink, red, lavender, purple, blue or white and are highly favored by butterflies. The variety, "Alma Potschke" is particularly appealing with its unique shade of strawberry-pink flowers. These native perennials perform best in moisture-retentive soils. Montauk daisies (Nipponanthemum, formerly Chrysanthemum nipponicum) provide showy, 21/2-inch blooms reminiscent of shasta daisies, set against glossy, dark green, leathery leaves. These shrubby perennials are ideal candidates for seaside gardens or sandy, well-drained soils; their woody stems should be cut back severely in early spring to promote compact growth.

A bounty of bees and butterflies are beckoned by the spectacular mounded domes of the upright forms of fall-blooming sedums. Flowers of pale to deep pink are to be found in the varieties "Brilliant," "Matrona," and "Neon"; "Stardust" dons sparkling, white umbels. Variegated cultivars, such as "Frosty Morn," are grown for their attractive foliage, their flowers having less decorative value than their more colorful cousins. Queen of the sedums is the variety "Autumn Joy" which resembles broccoli in mid-summer, becomes pale pink as the season progresses, intensifying in color to a deep, russet-red in autumn, and finally forming dense, sturdy rusty-colored domes which persist through the winter months providing attractive winter forms in the dormant garden. Sedums prefer full sun, well-drained soils and minimal quantities of moisture.

The fluffy, tall spikes of Liatris scariosa "White Spires" offer another welcome source of early autumn blooms. Less well known than its earlier-blooming cousins which have denser clusters of rosy-purple, this late-blooming gay feather shares the same fairly unique habit of opening from the top down, the reverse of the majority of spiky blooms. Give these American natives very well-drained soils, particularly during the winter months.

By mid-September, many shady borders become a monotone of lackluster green. A majority of our handsome hostas begin to fade, their decorative leaves start to shrivel, blue-leafed cultivars turn to deep green, and spent flower stalks, often covered with seed pods, rise above the declining foliage, but the shady garden still boasts several colorful, late-blooming stars.

A personal favorite, the unique, deep pink flowers of turtlehead, Chelone obliqua, are dazzling at the back of my shady borders. Each blossom resembles a turtle's head. The flowers appear on compact terminal spikes, rising from 3-foot stems clothed in dark green, lustrous, serrated leaves which are handsome in all seasons. These native wildflowers require moist soils but are otherwise carefree, hardy perennials.

Few perennials offer the intense, cobalt-blue flowers of the fall-blooming leadwort (Ceratostigma plumbaginoides). Its brilliant blue flowers appear above mats of deep green foliage which gradually turn to a deep bronze or red as the season progresses. An excellent groundcover for dappled shade in well-drained soils, it is particularly lovely when grown in combination with the charming flowers of the Japanese anemones whose loose clusters of round, single or semidouble flowers in pink, rose or white appear to dance on wiry stems, hence the common name of windflower. Members of the anemone family produce mounds of attractive, compound leaves and thrive in deep, moisture-retentive soils.

Cohasset vets honor new American heroes

Trade Center. "A few minutes later, we knew exactly what had happened that this country was deliberately attacked."

The assembled veterans and crowd numbering about 100 joined post chaplain Charles Daly in prayer and also sang together "Amazing Grace" and "God Bless America." A firefighter tolled the bell on the Cohasset ladder truck. Taps was played by Carly Pipes.

Police Sgt. Robert Jackson, a US Navy veteran, said the tragic events essentially made everyone an American veteran.

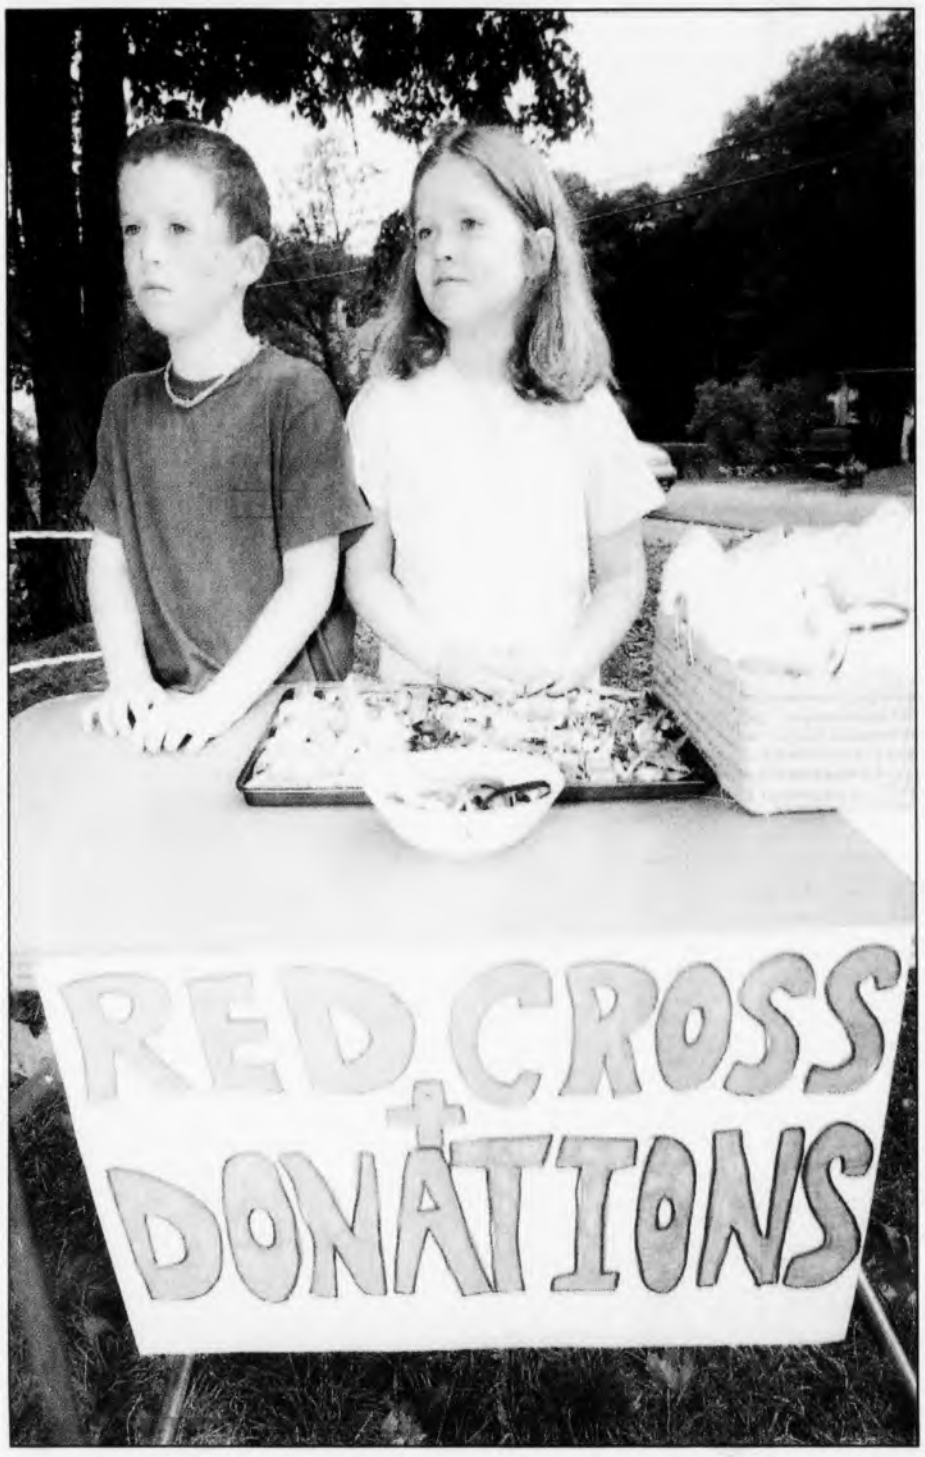
"New heroes went to help with quiet resolve to right the wrong," Jackson said. He then talked about the task ahead.

"The conflict we find ourselves in won't be short and certainly won't be pretty," he said, adding that a lot would be asked of the American people who would prevail.

"We pause to honor the new American heroes and pray for those who sail in harm's way," Jackson said. "Tomorrow the flags go to full staff and we as an American people will work together to eradicate this horror."

Thomas Wigmore, commander of the Sons of the American Legion, said the American Legion would become a support center for any families of US service men and women who may be deployed. He asked that "everyone keep an eye on the kids and family members."

"I'd hate to see a child go without Christmas gifts or a family sit down without a supper," he said.



Although Tim Toomey, 12, of Border Street, was one of the younger people present, he was among the most patriotic. He and his siblings set up a table to get donations for the Red Cross and when the songs played, he sang the loudest.

"We live on Border Street and I felt we should come out," Tim said.

His mother, Sheila, said Tim, a seventh-grader, is a history buff and was very inspired by the president's speech to the nation last Thursday. "He wishes he was old enough to serve," she said.

Fred Piepenbrink sings "God Bless America."

David and Emily Toomey distribute candy and popcorn for donations for the American Red Cross during Saturday's ceremony.

Lawsuit looms over rail bed

AfTA says town can't give up right-of-way

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Add Greenbush lawsuits to the list of sure things in life, including death and taxes.

An attorney for anti-train group, AfTA [Advocates for Transportation Alternatives], has notified Cohasset selectmen and state officials of the group's intent to sue over the abandoned Cohasset rail bed.

As part of its mitigation agreement with the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, Cohasset agreed to a "friendly land-taking" of the railroad right-of-way. The MBTA, which would take the land by eminent domain, will pay the town $1.6 million for the six-mile stretch in exchange for the town not opposing the land-taking in court.

But a letter from Douglas H. Wilkins of the Cambridge law firm Anderson & Krieger, which is representing AfTA, contends the town does not have the right to give up the right-of-way without a two-thirds vote of both houses of the state legislature. According to Wilkins, the state constitution prohibits sale of conservation land without Statehouse approval.

This is the third lawsuit filed by AfTA, whose president, John Bewick of Hingham, is a former state secretary of environmental

Indoor plumbing plug not pulled

Puts historic museums at risk, society says

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Back in the 1700s and 1800s – people didn't worry about indoor plumbing. When nature called, a trip to the outhouse was all that was required. But some 200 years later, life is a lot more complicated as evidenced by a feud brewing between the Cohasset Historical Society and the Sewer Commission.

On advice of town counsel, the Sewer Commission is requiring the historical society hook up its two Elm Street museums – the Capt. John Wilson House [1810] and Maritime Museum [1750] — to the sewer and pay the required betterment of about $3,000.

The historical society says it can't afford the betterment and there's no point because the buildings don't have bathrooms or kitchens. Society president Martha Gjesteby said modernizing the two antique buildings with indoor plumbing would be costly and destroy their character. She explained the museums are only open for a few hours a day during the summer and therefore, toilet facilities aren't needed. Requiring expensive upgrades would effectively close the museums, she said.

The historical society has even

Pastor preached there occasionally

By Evan Schiff
CORRESPONDENT

When the Rev. Douglas Fish was offered the position of pastor Beechwood Congregational Church, he knew it would be a good fit.

"I let the Bible speak for itself...with humor."
— The Rev. Douglas Fish

"While working part-time at the church I really got to like the people and the type of worship that they practice," he said.

The Hull resident emphasized the congregation's more traditional style of worship was something he really enjoyed. So the transition from filling in sporadically to preaching every Sunday was an easy one.

Fish, who stands over six-feet tall, believes that he was a strong candidate for the job because, "they knew me, and enjoyed my preaching and sense of humor." In his sermons he tries to amplify what the scriptures

A garden, 40 years in the making

Featured on NECN

By Rick Collins

Tucked away in the woods separating North Cohasset from Forest Avenue is Russ Lennon's yard.

More than 40 years ago, the land off Tad Lane was part of the Ledge Acres chicken farm, built on top of a granite outcropping, which lurked just inches beneath the surface.

Lennon bought the house in the early 1960s, and after many years and thousands of hours of work, he almost has the yard looking as he wants.

"I'm not afraid of a little hard work and it keeps me out of trouble."
— Russ Lennon, Tad Lane

"I'm not afraid of a little hard work," he said strolling through his nearly two-acre, walking garden. "And it keeps me out of trouble."

His hard work garnered his some unexpected attention recently. New England Cable News found out about Lennon's garden and came down last month ago to film a piece for its "New England Gardens" segment, which aired a couple of weeks ago.

Behind his 1893 house — originally one of the farm's large hen houses — is a multi-level yard built into a gently sloped-hill. Crushed stone paths lead down past a small waterfall, which Lennon constructed

Town's character not rock solid

Group wants ledge saved

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Prominent ledge outcroppings give Cohasset its unique character and should be preserved, says a local citizens' group.

To that end, the Great Neck Ledge Preservation Group lobbied selectmen to support amending the zoning by-law to make it more difficult for developers or homeowners to remove or blast away ledge that is eight feet or higher off the ground.

To be adopted, the amended by-law requires a two-thirds vote at the Nov. 5 Special Town Meeting.

Mark DeGiacomo of Beach Street, who acted as spokesman, said preserving the "more magnificent ledge" is the group's goal.

"We want to craft a by-law that preserves the meaningful ledge that contributes to the character of the town," he said.

> "We want to craft a by-law that preserves the meaningful ledge that contributes to the character of the town."
> — Mark DeGiacomo, Beach Street

If the by-law amendment passes, a builder or homeowner would need a variance before altering the ledge in any manner. Zoning variances are difficult to obtain.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said the issue needs to be further defined before he could support it. He questioned whether the amended by-law would apply equally to blasting away a large piece of ledge to make room for a new house, for example, or just removing a "nub" or corner of ledge in someone's backyard. He was also concerned about ledge that crosses property lines and may vary in height from one parcel to another.

DeGiacomo said the proposed by-law, as drafted, would apply to any situation involving ledge eight feet or higher. He added the group was somewhat flexible on the eight-foot ledge restriction. The initial proposal of a three-foot height restriction was changed because members thought the higher number would make it more palatable to townspeople, he said.

DeGiacomo explained ledge preservation has become an issue in town because through today's technology, it is possible to build homes through blasting in areas that were before thought not build-able.

Selectman Tom Callahan agreed saying marginal land that is more "ledgy" is now attractive to developers.

Selectman Merle Brown said he wasn't sure how many people in town really cared about the issue.

"The one that makes the most noise gets the grease," he said about the lobbying effort.

"We'll find out at Town Meeting, just how important it is," DeGiacomo said.

Selectmen agreed to keep the article on the warrant and a 3-2 majority will recommend it pass muster at Town Meeting. Sullivan and Brown voted not to recommend it at this time.

Special Town Meeting could be a whopper

Lots of issues before voters

By Rick Collins
MFORD@CNC.COM

If last week's selectmen meeting is a sign of things to come, the Special Town Meeting slated for Nov. 5 could be long and contentious.

The board reviewed the 26-article draft warrant, held 11 for discussion this week and removed two altogether. The board held lively discussions on many others ranging from department budget increases, capital improvements, Little League field construction, and a new police station.

If all articles were to pass, the town would approve just under $500,000 in new spending initiatives, borrow $1.6 million, including $1.2 million for the James Brook Flood Control project which the MBTA has agreed to reimburse. The town would also squirrel away more than $500,000 into its savings account and keep another $500,000 to offset next year's operating budget.

The board recommended a $441,100 increase to departmental budgets, that includes an extra $100,000 for the school department; $50,000 for town field maintenance; a $30,000 increase to the legal budget; $72,000 for the police department to cover overtime costs; and $10,000 for an increase in salary in accordance with the newly-settled library union contract. The increases would be partially offset by a proposed $231,000 reduction to the sewer budget, because the wastewater treatment facility is not yet running at full capacity.

The increase is also minus Town Manager Mark Haddad's proposed $4,000 salary increase for Town Finance Director Michael Buckley. Haddad told selectmen that Buckley's duties had expanded since he was hired, and wanted to reward his hard work and good attitude by naming him assistant town manager, and giving him a 5 percent raise.

"When I have an employee like that, he should be rewarded. He's been the de facto assistant town manager and I just want to formalize it," said Haddad.

Selectmen balked against the salary increase and the creation of a new title.

"We're just institutionalizing another position that we're going to end up paying for," argued Selectman Michael Sullivan.

Selectmen voted unanimously to take out the money from the article, but suggested Buckley be given a stipend if named acting town manager in Haddad's absence.

Selectmen also asked Haddad to conduct an analysis study to see if additional officers would help reel in the ballooning police overtime budget.

The board also voted to recommend an article that would institute a 4 percent hotel tax.

Haddad said the tax is just another way for the town to increase revenues, and estimated the town could collect as much as $25,000 a year from the tax.

Attorney Charles J. Humphreys, representing Kimball's By the Sea owner Peter Roy, argued that the tax would make it tougher for the hotel to compete with the cheaper and larger hotels located in Hanover and Rockland.

But the board still voted unanimously to support the article.

Selectmen also voted to recommend articles that would:

Σ change the new park of the former Hagerty property site to "Mariner's Park."

Σ authorize the town to borrow $212,000 to draw up architectural plans for a new police station. This passed by a 3-2 majority vote.

Σ change an April 2000 Town Meeting vote and allow the Paul Pratt Memorial Library construction project to proceed without the $1.5 state library construction grant in hand.

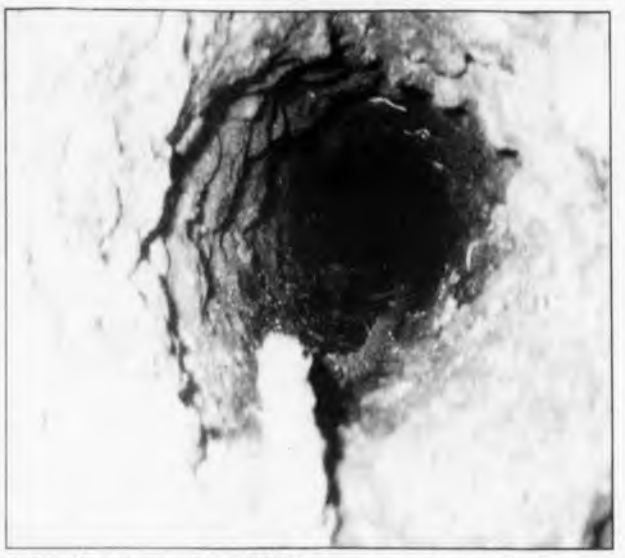
Σ put $567,281 raised from interest on money borrowed for the Osgood School and sewer construction projects, into the town's stabilization fund – its savings account.

Σ place $35,000 into the Private Way Repair Capital Account fund.

Σ approve the general concept of the village improvements plans, as voted by selectmen and the Village Revitalization Task Force and created in conjunction with the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation. The plans will be on display at the Town Clerk's Office before the Town Meeting.

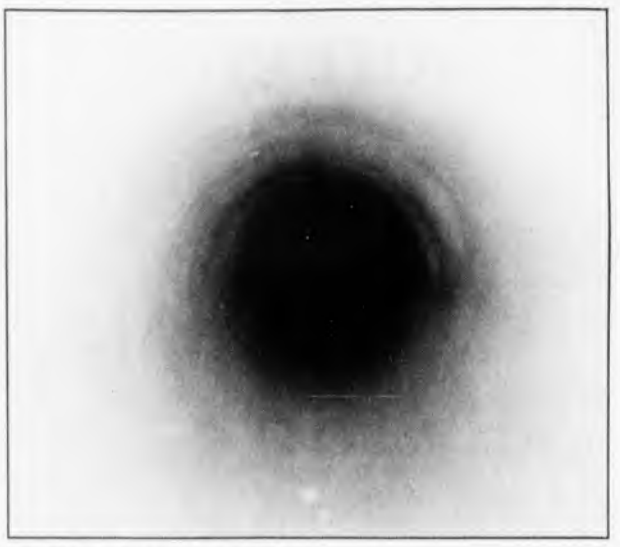
Σ buy $74,000 worth of equipment for the Department of Public Works, including two new trailers, a new mower, and $25,000 worth of equipment for the newly expanded Woodside Cemetery.

Σ authorize the town to borrow $1.2 million for the final phase of the James Brook Flood Control project [see related story].



Σ allow the town to borrow $100,000 for the construction of a new sidewalk along Forest Avenue.

Σ waive all sewer fees and sewer assessments for the Cohasset Historical Society's Wilson House and Maritime Museum. This was the lone citizen's petition.



Selectmen voted to not include an article that would ban boats larger than 45 feet from docking at private docks, calling it discriminatory, and an article that would impose a moratorium on new growth until the master plan was finished and could be implemented.

The board also hopes to also remove articles that would give $20,000 for the creation of a new town Web site; $5,000 to the Conservation Fund; and authorize and require utility companies to charge a 2 percent surcharge onto utility bills in order to bury their lines within the village area.

The Nov. 5 Special Town Meeting will begin at 7 p.m. and be held in the Sullivan Gymnasium at the middle/high school.

Water pipes suffer from 'tuberculation'

Affects fire flow

By John McNabb
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Recently, the Water Department contractor, Bizco, has laid bypass pipe on both sides of Elm and Summer Street, cut holes in the street, and been interrupting traffic flow while they clean and line the water pipes under the street.

These activities have been disruptive for many Cohasset residents, especially since that area was torn up just a few years ago first for the town drainage project at the intersection of Elm, Summer, and Border Street, and the more recent sewer installation project.

The two pictures shown here show clearly why this water department project is needed. The "before" picture shows the water pipes before the cleaning and lining project. As you can see, the water pipe is heavily encrusted with "tuberculation" which is made of sediment, mineral deposits, and corrosion byproducts. Many water pipes in Cohasset still look like this.

This project was funded at the Oct. 23, 2000 Special Town Meeting, after flow tests showed that fire flows at a fire hydrant at Elm Street and Border Street was only 1,472 gallons per minute (gpm) much lower than the required 3,000 gpm needed for fire protection. Fire flows at Parker Ave and Border Street were also too low – 351 gpm when 1,500 gpm are needed (which we will help rectify by also replacing water pipe at the end of Border Street very soon).

Tuberculation reduces fire flows, since it reduces the size of the inside of the pipe, and also degrades water quality, since it collects solid matter that, while not a health threat, causes discoloration in the water that can make it unpleasant to drink.

The cleaning and lining process consists of either mechanically or hydraulically scraping the inside of the pipe to remove all of the tuberculation. Once the pipe is sufficiently cleaned and de-watered, a thin lining of cement mortar is centrifugally applied to the pipe and is smoothed. After the mortar cures, the pipe is inspected, tested, disinfected, and placed back into service.

The "after" picture here shows a part of the Elm Street pipe (the project is partially complete) after it was cleaned and lined. As you can see, all of the tuberculation is gone and the inside of the pipe is smooth, allowing greater water flow with less resistance, which improves water service. This will increase the fire flows – to the required levels (along with all the other improvement projects we have scheduled).

This cleaning and lining project also improves the water quality, to people of this area but also to people all over town, because of this reduction in tuberculation. People all over town have already noticed improvements in quality from the improvements we have made since 1994. A total of 12.1 miles of water mains, about one-third of the 36-mile system, have been replaced or cleaned & lined, since 1994. As we continue to clean and line and replace more water mains, everyone will see even more improvements in water flow and pressure and in water quality.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

WORKING TOGETHER

October has entered with some beautiful weather and a pretty calm beginning. Please keep your thoughts and prayers for all the families and victims of the tragedies in our country and also, for reassuring and moving forward for us all. Although the unknown is very scary, it is important for us as a community to work together and move forward in all aspects of our lives. Our children also look to us for guidance and support and reassurance that we as adults are doing everything in out power to make sure that they are safe. By allowing them to show and voice their fears, addressing them in a loving and caring way and also letting them find ways that they feel will help are all beneficial for all. If any of you have done something to raise money or "make a difference" with your family, please note that several area banks are matching donations that are made. I hope that everyone enjoys this upcoming Columbus Day weekend.

NO SCHOOL FRIDAY

I want to remind all the families of Cohasset schoolchildren that there is no school on Friday, Oct. 5 due to a planned professional day!

BEST WISHES

I would like to send out a very special and heartfelt congratulations to Jean Bailey and her fiancé, John Sweet, as they get ready for their wedding this weekend. You have both found a wonderful person to share the rest of your lives with. Enjoy your special day, it goes so quick but is such a fantastic way to begin the rest of your lives together.

RELIEF EFFORT

Here is a great story about a neighborhood that worked together to raise money for the American Red Cross. The weekend immediately following the attacks, the children of several families from the Brewster/Ledgewood Road area made and sold ribbons to the neighbors and then, sold them at the Shaw's and Curtis Liquors plazas. The three-day effort, along with the donations from the "Winning Foursome" in a golf tournament and the matching gift program from Sovereign Bank totaled $1300! What a great job and show of neighborhood spirit from the Mahoney, Richardson, Donahue, Goltz and Jaffe families!

ATTIC SALE

Anyone in the mood for an "Attic Sale?" On the grounds of the Glastonbury Abbey on Saturday, Oct. 13 from 8 a.m.-2 p.m. will be a wonderful attic sale featuring arts & crafts, live music, food, raffle prizes, soap, aprons and more made by the monks and miscellaneous "attic treasures" including books, glassware, trinkets, furniture and so much more! The Abbey is located at 16 Hull St., (Route 228) about a 1/4 mile from Route 3A.

CHILDREN'S LIBRARIAN

Hey all you children and readers out there, guess who is at the Paul Pratt Library waiting to see your smiling, happy faces? Sharon Moody is the new children's librarian and cannot wait to have you visit her at the library. She says that new books are arriving all the time and she would love to show you your favorites. Also, any child who completed their summer reading goals who has not picked up their certificate and complimentary books should pick it up soon. Welcome to the library, Sharon!

CHURCH SUPPER

A contemporary worship at the Second Congregational Church is being held on Saturday, Oct. 13 at 5 p.m. All are welcome to come and enjoy this worship and a church supper! A meal will be shared and all will be able to sing some songs, pray, hear the Word and break bread among family and friends. Please call the church office at 383-0345 to arrange food and ask any questions you may have.

Bob and Ginger King of Cohasset accept a gift of appreciation from the United Way of Massachusetts for hosting the South Shore Leadership Committee party. From left are, Christopher Gabrieli, chairman of Keeping Kids on Track; Ginger King; Bob King, retired executive of the Gillette Company; Sheri Adlin, executive director of South Shore Day Care Services; and UWMB president and CEO Marian L. Heard.

RACING DUO

Whoever said race cars were just for boys hasn't met sisters, Shanna, 10, and Katherine Scafuri, 13, of Cohasset, who are recent graduates of the Junior Race School at F1 Boston! Now the girls are eligible to take part in F1 Boston's junior leagues and practice sessions. The race school is for kids age 7 and up and combines theory sessions in the classroom with practical sessions in the pits and out on the track. You go, girls!

OFF TO COLBY

All the best to Lauren M. Smith of Cohasset who has enrolled at Colby College in Maine as a member of the Class of 2005. A Thayer Academy grad, Lauren is the daughter of William and Maureen Smith. Before classes got underway, Lauren attended a three-day campus orientation and prior to that, she took part in a four-day Colby Outdoor Orientation Trip with about a dozen other students. Have a great year, Lauren!

Shanna Scafuri (in kart) and Katherine Scafuri at the f1 Boston Junior Race School.

Lois and David Weltman of Cohasset enjoy the United Way South Leadership Party. Eight years ago, the Weltmans hosted the first South Shore United Way Leadership Party.

I am including a quote that was sent to me yesterday that really inspired me as I hope it will for you. Thank you again to a wonderful person and friend for this.

Scout's Eagle project brings a playground back to life

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Will McArthur grew up near the Beechwood Ball Field where he hung out with his friends and played baseball like all the other kids

But as a youngster, he couldn't have imagined that he would one day become so familiar with the playground at the Bates Lane end of the neighborhood field.

And like most kids, when he signed up for Cub Scouts – he had no goal of taking scouting right to the top.

Now that's ancient history. Today, what makes Will different from most other 17-year-olds, is his commitment to scouting and community service – the combination of which has led to his current perch on the edge of achieving Eagle Scout rank.

As part of his march toward the highest achievement in scouting, Will, who is a member of Troop 28, earned some 32 badges [11 more than required] along the way. Then he had to come up with a community service project that wasn't related to scouting, document all that's involved and see it through to fruition.

First, the Cohasset High School senior investigated constructing a wheelchair ramp at the Beechwood Congregational Church as an Eagle Scout project but discovered it would be nearly impossible to make the ramp work right on the historic building.

"So I looked around something else and thought this could be done," Will said about the Beechwood playground with its rusty equipment. What lay ahead was writing up a proposal, obtaining approval from the town, getting the necessary money and materials, organizing a small army of volunteers and doing the work. In June, with all the approvals in hand, Will — with the help of fellow scouts and other volunteers — set about painting, repairing and replacing the playground equipment.

"It's nice to see kids helping kids."
— Jack Worley, recreation department director

There has been great support — both of the moral, monetary and "pitch-in" variety — from many, Will said. The Beechwood Improvement Association, the Cohasset Firemen's Benefit Association, the George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118 and individuals donated money. Others, like Wayne Sawchuk, came down with a backhoe to help; 3A Towing tore down the dilapidated second swing set; and PA Landers, a construction company, provided about 40 tons of sand at cost. Neighborhood feedback has all been positive, Will said.

Cohasset Recreation Department director Jack Worley said the old playground, which was in need of repair, has been there at least 25 years.

"It's nice to see kids helping kids," Worley said. "Will is helping out younger kids through his Eagle Scout work."

Saturday, Will was hard at work with a little help from his parents, Bill and Becky, spreading two truckloads of sand around the base of the swing set, slide and other equipment. [The rest of Troop 28 was away on a camping trip for the weekend.]

After the finishing touches are put on the playground, including painting the old bench, Will has to complete his book documenting the project, write and essay, and obtain five references. Once the book is finished, it is reviewed by the Eagle board of review at the local Boy Scout Council in Canton and sent on to the national council in Texas for final approval. Once the national council gives the okay, the scout has qualified for Eagle Rank which is bestowed at a court of honor. An Eagle Scout candidate must complete the book and project must before he turns 18.

When he isn't at school or busy with scouting activities, Will works part-time at CVS in Cohasset. He also plays the trumpet in the school band; took part in the Appalachia Service Project, which is a house-repair ministry sponsored by the Second Congregational Church, and as for college, he plans to apply to the University of Maine at Farmington.

Will said scouting has provided him with opportunities he would not have had otherwise, such as participating in national scout jamborees where he met other scouts from across the country.

Merle Brown, a selectman and assistant scout master, said when boys turn 16 and get their driver's licenses, it's difficult for them to find the time for scouting let along Eagle projects.

"I commend any kids who put the time and commitment to it," Brown said. "It's a tough thing."

Cohasset Troop 28 has had nearly 80 members become Eagle Scouts in its 80 year history.

Growing pains

The average Cohasseter may not have a clue what the Benjamin Report is.

Suffice it to say, it was the town's last try at a Master Plan — one that has been sitting on the shelf collecting dust for the past 40 years.

Luckily, the Benjamin Report missed the mark on at least one issue: town growth. It predicted little Cohasset would be about the population of Hingham right now.

That didn't happen and Cohasset, tipping the scales at about 7,000 people, has remained a small town.

But just because uncontrolled growth hasn't happened in the past doesn't mean it won't in the future.

As was abundantly clear at the selectmen's meeting this week, during which the board grappled with a range of articles for the upcoming Special Town Meeting, growth is pounding at our door.

The issue before the town is not to prevent growth, but how to manage it — so the town ultimately benefits and maintains its character.

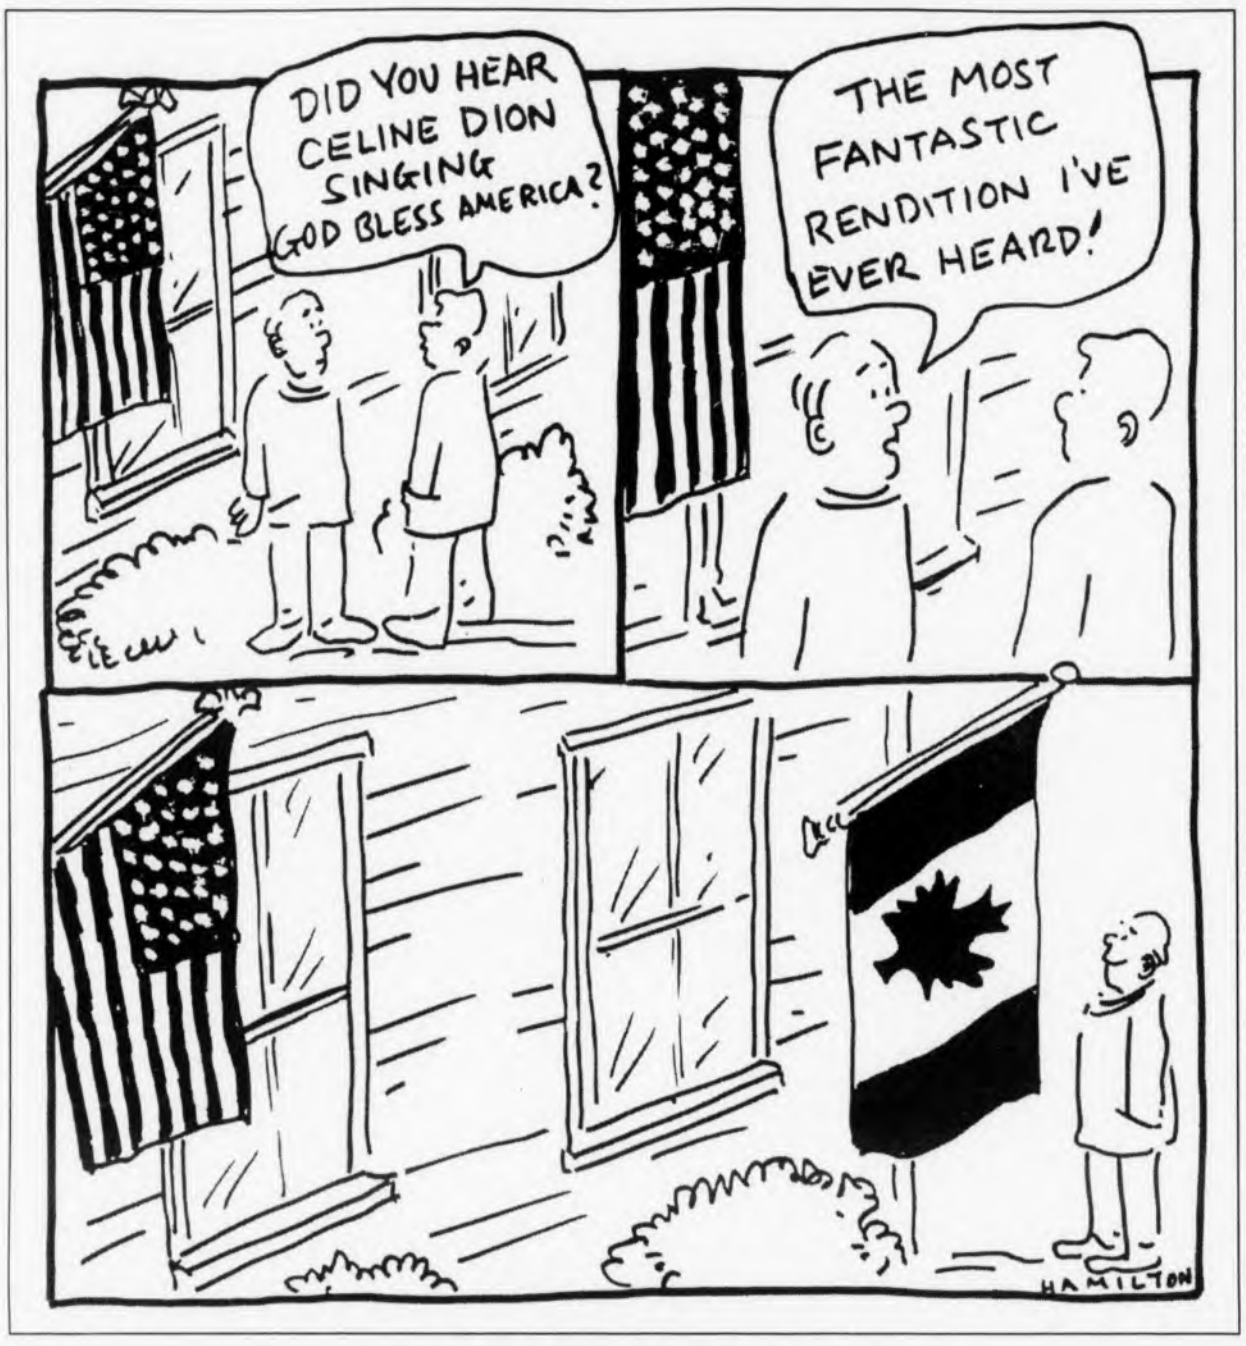
As Growth and Development Committee member Clark Brewer said, "Good planning can help reduce anxiety about what might happen to Cohasset in the future."

With that in mind, we bet that anyone reading this editorial will agree on one thing — they don't want much to change here. Cohasset is one of those special places that people — not lucky enough to have been born and raised in town — choose to move to. Once here, they don't want to go anywhere else.

There are several issues before the Nov. 5 Special Town Meeting that will affect how Cohasset moves into the 21st Century. A comprehensive Master Plan is being drafted and voters will be asked to give the project a financial boost to help pay for mapping, reports on traffic issues and the like.

Another article related to the Master Plan process, would restrict the number of building permits for a couple of years, until the Master Plan comes together.

And as technology makes more and more "marginal" land appealing to builders, a citizens group hopes the town will support protecting prominent ledge from blasting or removal through an amendment to the zoning by-law.



Another issue is how to create affordable housing for senior citizens through the possibility of cluster developments on various tracks of land around town.

Still another topic is how to handle the police and fire departments, which have outgrown their tight quarters on Elm Street.

The Special Town Meeting will also set up the Community Preservation Committee charged with making recommendations for the acquisition and preservation of historic resources, open space and affordable housing as required under the Community Preservation Act, adopted by the town last spring.

Although some might want to, Cohasset is not going to be able to pull up the drawbridge and prevent growth. However, it's incumbent that we all pay attention in the weeks and months ahead so the town is well equipped to face the challenges that new development presents.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Osgood Playpark

TO THE EDITOR:

Dear Selectmen:

Three years ago, my family relocated to Potomac, Maryland, a suburb of Washington, D.C. after living in Cohasset for 14 years. I have many wonderful memories of our time in Cohasset, especially the time I spent in community service in support of students with special learning abilities, of my choral group, "Allegra;" of the many musical activities of the schools and the town and in the various ways I got involved with the citizens of Cohasset who believed in working hard to enhance the way of life in this beautiful community. A recent article in the Mariner about Mr. Haddad's recommendation to raze the Osgood Playpark really got my attention and has prompted my letter to you.

I was the coordinator of the fundraising, design, labor, equipment, materials and construction of the Playpark in 1988-89. It was a remarkable time of cooperation in Cohasset as so many—old and young, big and small, skilled and unskilled—joined forces to raise funds and work together to provide the youngsters of the town with a valuable learning environment.

I remember Fr. Keohane from St. Anthony's urging his parishoners, from the pulpit no less, to go down to the site and get involved in one of the most ecumenical things he'd seen in Cohasset. Not a bad recommendation. People worked side by side, amazed by the talents of the people of this town. I recently came across a letter I sent to the Mariner in which I remarked that the finished product represented not only a space for children to grow and develop, but also as a model of unity. That was 12 years ago. A lot has changed.

At the completion of the project, the designer of the Playpark presented me with a thorough plan for maintenance—daily, weekly, monthly and annually—which I passed on to the Osgood School. This plan didn't cost a lot of money, but in my budget, I had provided fund to support the cost of equipment replacement and maintenance for a few years and enlisted voluntary help for the first year. The Playpark became not only a center for the youngsters of Cohasset, but was enjoyed by many from miles around. It seemed to never be empty. But the will to maintain it by "the powers that be" wasn't there.

Before I left Cohasset, I had a meeting with Mr. Haddad to give him this list of maintenance activities. I was concerned, not only about a child being injured, but also about the Town of Cohasset's moral and financial responsibility. I'll never forget his response.

So it doesn't surprise me to read that Osgood Playpark, after years of neglect, is referred to as a "hazard." But I rejoice that so many have seen its beauty, have enjoyed its harmony and have felt the temporary peace of a wonderful and worthwhile accomplishment. I wish you the best in your decision-making.

Pancake breakfast

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Soccer Booster Club would like to thank all who supported the Booster pancake breakfast held this past Sunday at the Deer Hill School.

More than 500 hungry people walked through the doors looking for food, friendship and a great way to help fund the school's soccer program. Some even walked away with cleaner cars thanks to the soccer players' car wash or even one of the many raffle prizes donated by local business people. The proceeds from the event are used to fund the two scholarships awarded annually, soccer banquets a t the season's end and also to purchase warm-up suits for the new varsity members added each year to the squads.

We would like to thank the following people and businesses for their support in this very successful endeavor: Atlantic Bagel, Buttonwood Books, Joe Coggins, Boston University, Boston Breakers, Cohasset Hardware, Good Sport, Melinda and Brad Murray, Gotshalks, Stop & Shop, Dunkin' Donuts, Village Deli, the O'Connell Family, United Foods, Fitness First and Tina Watson.

Oh, only for a second chance!

TO THE EDITOR:

Near the end of his long life, Winston Churchill was asked what he might have done differently. His succinct reply: "I might have played the red instead of the black at Monte Carlo"!

What might a long time homeowner say if asked what should have been done differently? One answer is "I should have spent a few dollars on professional landscape advice when I first bought the property. Then I would have had a long-term plan which could have been executed by degrees whenever I could afford to do something. The trees and shrubs I could have bought for peanuts now would have grown big, valuable, beautiful and in the right places, and the result would be pleasing, rational and practical."

Young homeowners too often (just as I did) lug home a few shrubs bought impulsively, then wonder where to plant them, and end up too close to foundations and otherwise in the wrong places. Too bad, because there isn't a better return on investment than small trees and shrubs that grow big, beautiful and valuable as part of a coherent long-term plan.

Our Board of Selectmen wisely accepted the public-spirited proposal from the Community Garden Club to provide a Tree Advisory service to help the Town choose desirable trees and con-

Is cutting back un-American?

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

To question our way of life right now seems not only un-American, unpatriotic, but perhaps even heartless, callous, and maybe even, to some, demonic and evil.

I abhor the terrorism — obviously. I cry for the victims and am grievously heart sore. Like most of us I find it very difficult to return to our normal way of life.

When I heard President Bush's speech, my immediate reaction was relief in vengeance; might is right; death to the assassins. That was all that mattered at the time.

A few days later I was caught short when my daughter-in-law, who recently returned from five years in Saudi Arabia, asked me what I thought of the speech. Just the way she asked the question reminded me that I have two grandsons nearing military age, that it has been said the war would last a long time, and that ground troops would be used.

To progress we obviously must ask ourselves why we are hated.

To progress we obviously must ask ourselves why we are hated. It has been said, because of our presence in Saudi Arabia [Mecca]. It has been said, because of our appetite for oil. It has been said, because of our sense of dominance.

Someone especially concerned about nature thinks about the oil and in the same breath thinks about the other natural resources that our technology requires. We realize the world's resources are limited. Either we cut back or we expand — into other people's space. To cut back is to curtail our comforts and our pleasures, our normal American way of life. See you next time.

Survey provides insight and ideas

MASTER PLAN

GROWTH & DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

The Cohasset Growth & Development Committee is nearing the end of the first step in developing the Master Plan for Cohasset. Neighborhood Forums conducted over the summer gathered numerous ideas from nearly 100 residents on their vision for the future of town. The participants also completed a preliminary survey in preparation for our town-wide survey this fall.

These findings reflect a small (but important) sample of the town's residents in attendance at those Forums. This work has helped provide a foundation for a final survey that will be sent to all registered Cohasset voters in the coming weeks. Please look for it, respond and make your voices heard. Here are some of the findings:

Σ When asked "How long do you plan to stay in Cohasset?" — 77 percent answered 'forever'.

Σ When asked "What do you think are the most important issues or challenges facing Cohasset in the next 5–10 years?" the list provided dozens of answers, with the top three as follows:

Growth & development (12 percent)
Sewers (8 percent)
Zoning revision/enforcement (7 percent)

Σ The top areas of concern (somewhat or very concerned) about the future of Cohasset included:

Wastewater management (89 percent)
Environment (89 percent)
Open space management (85 percent)
Commercial development (82 percent)
Housing development (78 percent)
Fiscal management (77 percent)
Historic preservation (74 percent)
Town government/services (70 percent)
Town governance/management (70 percent)
Transportation (69 percent)
Housing variety (69 percent)
Village revitalization (68 percent)
Harbor utilization (63 percent)
Public education (62 percent)

Σ The most important issues residents felt that Cohasset should address (agree or strongly agree) include:

limit the size of houses on present properties (88 percent) pursue more communal solutions to wastewater treatment (84 percent) purchase more open space and properties (70 percent) add more sidewalks (64 percent) offer more variety in housing (63 percent) limit population growth (63 percent) revitalize the town center (57 percent) pursue more regionalization of town services: fire, police, schools (56 percent) encourage the train to return to Cohasset (54 percent) allow more commercial development (44 percent)

Σ The top three issues that gained 'strong agreement' presented a slightly different picture:

open space (48 percent) limiting size of homes (46 percent)
train return (42 percent)

Please note that the above is a small (but important) sample of the town's opinion. This data has helped us prepare a final survey that the town will be sending to all registered Cohasset voters in the next two weeks. Please look for it and make your voice heard!

Cohasset Resident Survey – The Town will be sending out a detailed survey to all registered Cohasset voters to collect ideas and opinions on a wide variety of issues. Please look for it in the mail in Mid-October. Your input is critical to helping establish a vision for Cohasset's future.

Funding – The committee has completed work to date with minimal cost to the town, but the next phases will require expert help and some funding to complete the Master Plan, including:

Preparing detailed computerized mapping of the town's geography

Studying the options and impacts of change to various growth (or non-growth), economic, traffic, budget and environmental issues.

Crafting the final Master Plan from the work of numerous other town boards and committees

Additional Interviews – More interviews are also planned with town stakeholders over the coming weeks, including such groups as the Chamber of Commerce, high school students, additional town committees, town employees and numerous special interest groups. These will be important to make sure all viewpoints are heard.

Draft Vision – A draft of the vision that includes important areas of agreement and principles for guiding the plan will then be drafted for presentation to the Town at a future Town Meeting.

We thank you all in advance for your interest and your patience with this process and for your future support in developing a vision for the future of Cohasset. Comments on the ideas and the process are welcome. It is important to all of us. Please contact Liz Harrington, Town Planner or any of the members of the committee.

Missing the pay phone

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth, I used to make sure I had a couple of nickels to rub together in my pocket in case I was called upon to make a telephone call.

A nickel! That shows you how long ago it was.

But before you could place the call, you had to find a phone, usually in a drug store or a saloon, and you had to tell the pleasant female voice on the other end what number you wanted, although dials were just coming in.

I see by the papers that Verizon Communications, the name under which the telephone company describes itself these days, is boosting the price of a pay phone call to 50 cents and you punch in the number like a bingo card.

Fifty cents! That was a half day's pay for those of us who picked beans on Arnold's Farm in the "good old days" before the war.

A nickel! That shows you how long ago it was.

The reason for the hike in price, which already went from a dime to a quarter in 1997 and to 35 cents a year later, is the proliferation of the latest instrument of torture devised by the progeny of Alexander Graham Bell — the ubiquitous cell phone.

Jack Hoey, the spokesman for Verizon, says pay phone use has declined 23 per cent in the past two and a half years, which, by coincidence, corresponds to the rise in the popularity of the cell phone.

Cell phones may well be the Walkmans and the Volkswagen Beetles of the 21st century. There are an estimated 114 million cell phones in use in the United States alone. And teenagers haven't really put them into full use yet.

Every investor with five shares of Disney has one so he can keep in touch with his broker. Every mother has several for her children so she can keep them out of trouble. Ha! Every drug lord and every working girl has one so that . . . well, you get the idea.

Some cell phone companies are now selling advertising on their service so you may pick up your ringing phone someday and find it's not the little woman reminding you to bring home a loaf of bread but Jim Sokolov, esq., urging you to sue a doctor.

Such junk calls are known as "spam," which is a slander on the foodstuff that everyone knows won the war.

So many cell phones have been ringing at crucial moments in movie houses in Hong Kong, which has 64 phones for every 100 residents, that the Office of the Telecommunications Authority is thinking of allowing theaters to install jamming systems.

Cell phones are not only an annoyance but can be danger as well as New York lawyer Jane Wagner found out when she ran down a pedestrian while talking business on her cell phone and driving at the same time. Her company is being sued for $30 million.

The investment firm of Salomon Smith Barney settled a suit for $500,000 when one of its brokers killed a motorcyclist while trying to drive and pick up a dropped cell phone at the same time.

That never happened when pay phone calls were a nickel and that got you a pleasant female voice that inquired, "What number, please."

Flu clinics

Annual Flu Clinics will be scheduled later in October and November.

All people 65 Years and older are urged to get a yearly flu shot as well as the case with chronic illnesses such as diabetes, pulmonary conditions or cardiac disease. As soon as the vaccine is available the clinic dates will be published in our local newspapers, church bulletins and posted in local store windows and businesses. Information on the flu and pneumonia vaccine is available through the public health nurse at 781 383-2210.

How amateur birders can help science

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Do you have bird feeders in your yard? Do you enjoy watching birds which come to your feeders? Would you like to add a little purpose to your hobby? If so, you might like to consider signing up to participate in Project FeederWatch. PFW is one of the citizen-science projects run by Cornell Lab of Ornithology in partnership with the National Audubon Society, Bird Studies Canada, and Canadian Nature Federation. It is about to begin its 15th season.

The science of ornithology uses amateurs to collect data for scientific projects.

The science of ornithology is different from most sciences in that it extensively uses amateurs to collect data for scientific projects. Volunteers with an interest in birds help all the time with ornithologic research. Last year PFW had more than 15,000 people spread across Canada and the United States counting birds on a regular basis, using a well designed scientific protocol. It would be impossible to collect such massive amounts of data if one had to rely on scientists stationed in 15,000 places across North America.

Cornell offers complete instructions to participants, including tips on identification of similar species. People doing the survey send in their results, either on paper forms at the end of the season or on the Web after each count period. Participants in PFW agree to count the birds coming to their feeders for two days out of every ten days between November and April. This does not mean you have to stay glued to the window all day, but you do keep track of the number of hours spent watching. If your viewing area happens to be outside a window where it is easy to watch during breakfast or while working in the kitchen, that simplifies the effort. Although it is discouraging to count on days when not many birds appear, it is as important to know where the birds are not as to know where the birds are.

You keep track of the highest number of each species you see at any one time. This way you don't count birds more than once. If one chickadee lands on a feeder, for instance, but there are others flying back and forth from the bushes, you count the total number in the area. If you see a male and female cardinal at different times, you still record only one bird, even though you know two have come to the feeder. This is because for some species it is impossible to distinguish between males and females, and it is important to keep the method the same for all species. Information about the weather, including the amount of snow cover, gets recorded. A site description form is filled out, including the kinds of vegetation, number and types of feeders, and which kinds of food are offered.

What can be learned from such a continent-wide survey? A lot has been learned about the abundance and distribution of birds as well as population shifts. Irruptions, or irregular movements of large flocks of birds, can be tracked and followed from year to year. The gradual expansion of winter ranges can be documented. Outbreaks of avian diseases can be traced. PFW surveyors are now asked to report any instances of mycoplasmal conjunctivitis (a type of eye infection) in House Finches or other birds. As soon as enough significant data have been collected, the investigators present them in scientific journals.

If one looks at the "percentage of feeders visited" as reported by 269 FeederWatchers in Massachusetts, the top five birds are Black-capped Chickadee, Mourning Dove, Blue Jay, Dark-eyed Junco and Tufted Titmouse. The actual numbers of Mourning Doves and Blue Jays visiting feeders have been declining in recent years. Cornell has devised a formula to calculate the "abundance index". By this formula, the five most abundant birds in Massachusetts are slightly different. These are Dark-eyed Junco, Mourning Dove, Black-capped Chickadee, American Goldfinch and Blue Jay.

In recent years, the option to record counts directly online has become available. This allows the scientists to analyze the data more quickly and allows the participants to follow what is happening on the Web. By visiting the FeederWatch Map Room at http://birds.cornell.edu/PFWMaproom/, it is possible to follow winter movements of birds. Various graphs, charts and summaries of data can be found on the Cornell web site. Two FeederWatch books have appeared recently: "The FeederWatcher's Guide to Bird Feeding" by Barker and Griggs, and "Birds at Your Feeder" by Dunn and Tessaglia-Hymes. These are both available through Cornell Lab of Ornithology. The latter book is in the Old Colony Library System, but neither is in the Hingham Public Library.

Amateur birders can help Project FeederWatch by observing what happens at their bird feeders, like this triple feeder in the Nortons' yard.

To sign up for Project FeederWatch, call the Cornell Lab at 800-843-2473, or sign up over the Web at http://birds.cornell.edu/pfw/, or send a check for $15 ($12 for members) to PFW/Cornell Lab of Ornithology, P.O. Box 11 Ithaca, NY 14850. They will send a packet which includes some identification helps, detailed instructions on how to conduct the counts, forms for recording the data, and a calendar with pictures of common feeder birds. Teachers who would like to involve their students in FeederWatch can ask for a class kit.

sult on plantings. We all will live with the plantings for a long long time, and it's well to get it right. Knowledgeable advice is precious!

On revitalization: many have noted that the harbor area is no longer looking so tired and scruffy, and there is increasing interest and some positive progress in rescuing the village area from slow decay. A few diehard naysayers still mutter and attempt the impossible i.e. being cynical and looking wise simultaneously. But enough people with vision have got in on the act to keep up the momentum. Whether revitalization is a new idea or merely a revival of previous vision doesn't matter much. Establishing goals and a plan will turn out to be a good investment, whether for the Town or for one's personal half acre.

Indoor plumbing plug not pulled offered to have a deed restriction on the buildings stating it would never have plumbing installed there.

The Sewer Commission says it's just trying to follow state code that requires all premises intended for "human habitation or occupancy" have potable water. The only water at the buildings is an outside spigot for the grounds.

The Nov. 5 Special Town Meeting may get the final word. The historical society obtained well over 100 signatures in time for a Citizens Petition to be placed on the warrant asking the buildings be exempt from all sewer betterments and fees.

Although Sewer Commission chairman Gary Vanderweil offered to arrange a conference call with himself, town counsel, and Gjesteby to discuss the matter – the consensus at Tuesday's sewer commission meeting was to let the people decide.

"If the town's wisdom says grant the exemption, then town counsel will be there to debate it," commissioner Ray Kasperowicz said.

The sewer line has been installed along Elm Street since the 1970s but the buildings were not required to hook up until recently because the sewer treatment plant has been expanded.

Nancy Gilmore of the historical society asked why the buildings couldn't maintain the status quo.

"We've been open for over 40 years. Why are we just being required to do this?"

— Nancy Gilmore, historical society

"Why did this not happen before now?" she asked. "We've been open for over 40 years. Why are we just being required to do this?"

Vanderweil, the commission chairman, explained that all houses that were not hooked up to the old system are getting betterments.

"The advent of the sewer project brought this forward," he said.

Attorney Richard Henderson, speaking for the society, said there may be some wiggle room. He disputed the verbiage "human habitation" meant "people passing through for a few hours during the day."

"It's reasonable for people to read the same regulations and come up with a different conclusion," Henderson said about town counsel's letter interpreting the plumbing code.

Henderson also said it is apparent any requirement to hook up to the sewer line must have been waived back in 1973 when it was installed, and therefore, could be again.

David Pottinger, a past president of the historical society, also pointed out the deed to the buildings restricts what can be done to them.

The Sewer Commission initially approved the abatement request in April as long as the society agreed never to have plumbing installed in the buildings. But commissioners changed their minds when town counsel recommended against the deal, saying the buildings would be in violation of state codes.

affairs. Saying there are better alternatives to the train such as commuter boats and buses, the group is trying to stop the planned 17-mile restoration of the Greenbush rail line because of its cost, safety issues at numerous grade crossings and environmental effects. Other AfTA legal action includes forcing the MBTA and other state agencies to release all Greenbush documents and more recently, a lawsuit over the conclusions of the Environmental Impact Report, dubbed an EIR, which gave the project a green light.

The Town of Hingham, which alleged the MBTA was paying for Greenbush with state dollars to avoid tougher federal environmental standards, settled its lawsuit with the MBTA in May 2000 as part of an agreement that includes a $40 million tunnel under Hingham Square.

In the letter to selectmen, Wilkins said unless Cohasset agrees to refrain from selling or transferring the land in the absence of the two-thirds approval of the legislature, "we intend to pursue litigation against the town, as we have already pursued against the MBTA." Other officials sent the letter by certified mail include: state Sec. of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand; Attorney General Thomas Reilly; state Sec. of Transportation and Construction Kevin J. Sullivan; Robert Prince, general manager of the MBTA; and Lauren A. Liss, commissioner, Dept. of Environmental Protection.

Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said he was "disappointed that AfTA is choosing to involve Cohasset" in its legal action..

Koed said he believes the MBTA has resolved any issues relating to the right-of-way.

"And the fact the town never said it was recreation land or took it as such would affect the argument" [that's it's conservation land], Koed said.

But in his letter Wilkins claims otherwise. He stated a review of the history dating back to 1965, including minutes of Conservation Commission meetings, shows the town discussed acquiring the right-of-way because it was a valuable property for conservation reasons. Discussions continued over the years with the 1981 Town Meeting voting to appropriate $140,000 to purchase the railroad right-of-way through the Cohasset. The deed transferring the land to the town was executed on March 12, 1982 and recorded in the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds.

The right-of-way is not zoned as conservation land or open space, according town zoning officer Robert Egan. The zoning along the right-of-way varies and matches whatever zoning district it passes through, such as residential or business.

But Wilkins stated AfTA is concerned the town may be treating the land as unused land when in fact, it is used for recreation including walking, hiking and cross-country skiing.

"If, in fact, the town and MBTA are treating this land as unused, we call upon you to rectify this erroneous characterization and not dispose of the land or otherwise use it without obtaining the necessary Legislative authorization by a two-thirds vote," Wilkins stated.

Bewick, the AfTA president, said legislative approval is required for land to be transferred from conservation or parkland use . The prior and future uses must also be explicitly identified, he said. Bewick said AfTA also believes there is a home-rule issue involved in that a Town Meeting vote may also be required to transfer the land.

"It is clear from the agreement Cohasset selectmen signed with the MBTA, they did not follow procedures," he said. "We are trying to insist that proper procedures be followed."

Jon Carlisle, spokesman for the state transportation office, said while the threatened lawsuit is an issue between Cohasset and AfTA, the office's legal counsel does not think the claims will "not hold much water at all."

He said at the time the town purchased the right-of-way there were no indications that the land be reserved as open space.

"The onus is on AfTA to prove the parcel was open space," Carlisle said. "We've looked over the records and don't see anything to indicate that and from the information sent us, neither does AfTA."

Carlisle said despite legal action – Greenbush is moving ahead.

"This line is going to be built and built soon," he said.

Scituate and Cohasset are the only two towns that own the abandoned rail bed. Limited freight service continued on the Greenbush Line to Hingham through the late 70s and the town did not have the opportunity to buy the right-of-way. Passenger service on the line ended in 1959.

Keeping ponds and streams healthy

Too much nitrogen can be nasty

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

When most people look at a peaceful body of water, they don't think about what might be lurking just below the surface. But the Board of Health has to think about how to tackle dangerous, unwanted intruders from taking root in the town's fresh and brackish water bodies to insure their survival.

To that end, the board has a regulation that deals with how to control substances called nitrates that ooze through the ground into ponds and streams thanks to septic systems that aren't geared to control the offshoots of nitrogen.

Nitrates encourage the wrong kind of growth — noxious weeds and grasses — that can choke off the oxygen to a pond and also, radically decrease its depth when they die and fall to the bottom taking up space, says health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik.

"A pond that was ten feet deep can be reduced to five feet deep and the process can continue until there is no pond anymore," he said.

Upgraded or new septic systems within 400 feet of water bodies such as Lily Pond, the Gulf River and James Brook, must comply with new town standards that greatly reduce nitrates. The health board monitors the state-of-the-art septic systems to make sure they are doing the job.

The board tests the affected septic systems on a regular basis increasing monitoring if unacceptable nitrogen levels show up. The board must also grapple with what to do if a system consistently fails. There are four such nitrate-limiting systems in town and one is problematic, Godzik said. The board is still deliberating on how to handle bringing the problem system into compliance.

Also, there are likely dozens more septic systems that haven't been upgraded within the 400-foot set back that could be adding to the nitrate problem in local water bodies. However, there is little the board can do about those. Under Title 5 — the state environmental code governing septic systems — septic systems don't even have to be inspected unless the property is sold or transferred. Only if the system fails does the homeowner have to fix or replace it. Even then, conventional Title 5 systems don't have to control nitrogen, that's why the Board of Health adopted its own nitrogen standards about two years ago.

"A pond that was ten feet deep can be reduced to five feet deep and the process can continue until there is no pond anymore."

— Dr. Joseph Godzik, health agent

"There could be quite a few septic systems in the Aaron River Road and Doane Street areas [contributing to nitrogen levels]," Godzik said. Other problematic areas in town, such as Summer Street and Blackhorse Lane are being added to the sewer.

However, when those "un-sewered" properties near water bodies do change hands, the Board of Health will require a different type of septic system to be installed if the existing system does not pass Title 5 — one that can handle nitrogen.

Godzik said the real push behind adding the homes near Straits Pond in North Cohasset to the sewer was the sorry state of the brackish pond. Due to years of nitrogen problems from failing septic systems, the pond had almost no depth and no oxygen to support life, he said. About 600 homes in North Cohasset are being connected to the wastewater treatment plant in Hull through an inter-municipal agreement. Sewering the homes should help return the pond to a healthy state because the failing septic systems will go off-line. Atlantic Avenue in Hull also borders Straits Pond.

Common sources of nitrogen include urine, food waste [especially from peas, legumes and soybeans], and cleaning products that contain ammonia, Godzik said.

Old voting booths put out to pasture

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Inside their walls, voters have set the course for the town by deciding on Prop. 2-1/2 overrides, who should be the next selectman, and whether the Greenbush line should be restored.

They've also played a role in many a state and national election — all the while providing privacy while citizens do their civic duty.

Now the old voting booths could actually become part of the history they helped create.

For safety reasons the 25-30 year-old portable structures need to be replaced.

"Voting booths are very expensive and they are not getting any cheaper," Town Clerk Marion Douglas told selectmen this week. "The current ones are in bad shape."

She explained that some of the booths have collapsed from time to time and she is concerned that a child accompanying a parent to the polls might get hurt.

Douglas said prices for new booths range from $137 each with no lights, to more than $300 with lights.

She recommended the town purchase the $199 model that is equipped with lights.

"Voting booths are very expensive and they are not getting any cheaper."

— Town Clerk Marion Douglas

By state law, the town is required to have one voting booth per every 125 voters. Therefore, the town needs 43 but Douglas would like to buy 48. The old booths number 48.

The Nov. 5 Special Town Meeting will be asked to appropriate $9600 for the new booths. Douglas said this is a good fiscal year to purchase them because there will only be one election. Elections cost the town about $3,000 each, Douglas said.

Selectmen will recommend voters appropriate money to buy new voting booths.

Rotary's governing body was very impressed after Cohasset Rotary reported its $21,000 in Cohasset student scholarships and $3157 in Cancer walk donations last year, which were among other funds raised from many Cohasset businesses and citizens, then distributed into the community. The popular Cohasset Rotary Phone Book and Road Race are the club's main fundraising activities.

A garden, 40 years in the making

Russ Lennon stands by some of the impatiens he planted in his garden that continues to evolve.

mental to his work ethic, as well as his originality and resourcefulness.

One summer, Lennon hand dug the foundation for an addition, only to come across two six-foot by six-foot granite boulders. He took some spare firewood, built a large fire around the boulders and let it burn for a weekend, heating up the rocks. "On Sunday, I put the hose on and you could hear it crack," he said. "I hit it with a sledgehammer and turned it all into small rocks. In two weekends I had it all out."

His greenhouse windows are built from two old sliding doors originally from the house. Small tables on his porch are built from ship portholes.

"Those aren't ever going to break," said Lennon, a member of the Navy Sea-Bees from 1950 to 1954.

Lennon said his wife, Jean, doesn't posses the same love of gardening as he does.

"She'll sometimes come down here and walk around, but her interests aren't in gardening," he said. "And this allows me to be able to keep out of her hair."

Lennon said he'll spend up to eight hours a day weeding, watering, trimming and feeding the fish. This past summer he laid down 60 new yards of gravel with the Honda tractor he bought himself as a retirement present in 1991.

"You never really finish with the work," he said. "But I hate the winter because then I can't work out here."

Lennon was surprised that his garden attracted the attention of New England Cable News.

"I never thought it would come to that," he said, with a smile. "But I enjoyed it."

New minister found for church

say and apply them to everyday life. He wants to turn people towards God and make them feel a part of something bigger.

"I let the Bible speak for itself... with humor," says Fish, who has a deep, warm voice. He believes humor is essential to life and tries to bring a smile to the face of the people he meets.

Lloyd Prescott, a trustee of the church, identified Fish's experience as one of his strengths.

"He brings an evangelical message...something we are very interested in hearing," he said.

For the past 13 years, Fish resided in Philadelphia, Penn, where he ministered for the Church of Nazarene. When Eastern Nazarene College in Quincy offered him a position he jumped at the opportunity and moved his family to Hull. Branson Roberts, the former minister of the Beechwood Congregational Church, works with Fish at Eastern Nazarene and helped to bring him to the church. Fish is currently the director of student accounts and financial aid for the college.

Two of the pastor's five brothers also work at Eastern Nazarene College. Fish also teaches part-time in the LEAD program at Eastern Nazarene for continuing education students.

Three jobs are enough for the new minister and he feels very content with where he is in life. Fish has been married to his wife Barbara for 25 years. Barbara teaches fourth grade at Brockton Christian School. His oldest son, William, is married and working on a master's degree in education. His daughter, Heather, teaches fourth and fifth grade in Woburn, while his youngest son, Dan, attends Eastern Nazarene and is majoring in sociology.

Fish received a bachelor of arts in general science from Eastern Nazarene College. He studied for his masters of business administration at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute and received a master of divinity degree from Nazarene Theological Seminary in Kansas City.

His hobbies include reading, and collecting old books and letters. The new church leader is particularly interested in anything that has to do with the families of John Quincy or Sam Adams. He enjoys Cohasset and relishes the fact that clergy members within the community have a positive relationship, which he sees as a significant benefit of the job. He sees the Sunday School program growing at Beechwood as well as the Bible study program.

Services at Beechwood Congregational Church start at 10 a.m., Sundays. Call the church office at 781-383-0808 for more information.

IT'S HAPPENING

Learn to relax

Mary Buxton, B.S., R.N., the director of South Shore Hospital's Stress Reduction Clinic will offer effective techniques for stress management on Monday, Oct. 15 from 7-9 p.m. in Bates Hall at the Second Congregational Church at 43 Highland Ave.

The clinic's advertising brochure explains that "Stress is the result of our reaction to all the events in our lives. Whether stress is helpful or harmful depends on the way we respond to these varied events." Unmanaged stress can result in physical illness — and physical illness and chronic pain can be sources of stress. People of all ages are encouraged to attend this informative presentation.

Weir River race

The Head of the Weir Race will take place Saturday, Oct. 20, at 11:30 a.m. The entry fee is $15, registration is required. The race will start from the West Corner Hingham-Hull line, to Windmill Point Boathouse, Hull, at Hull Gut.

One of the Hull Lifesaving Museum's most beloved events, the Head of the Weir, is a celebration of open-water rowing and both the beautiful Weir River Estuary and Boston Harbor in autumn.

The boats in Head of the Weir River Race jockey for position as they race out of the estuary and into the open water from West Corner (on the Hingham/Hull/Cohasset line), past Bumpkin Island, across Hingham Bay, to the museum's Windmill Point Boathouse.

A highly contested 51/2-miler, the Weir draws coxed youth and adult crews, single and double scullers, curraghs, and Alden ocean shells. It is an exceptionally exciting race and a great spectator event, featuring, typically, more than 30 boats and 150 of the region's finest rowers, including youth and adult crews from Boston Harbor, Maine, Vermont and New York.

Best views are from the bridge on George Washington Boulevard (5-to-15 minutes after the start), at the tip of Hull's Sunset Point, or at the boathouse finish line. Spectators should show great care crossing the road on George Washington Boulevard, watching for fast moving traffic.

Registration will begin at 9:30 a.m. behind the Hull Public Works building at the Hull town line on Route 228. For more information call Ed McCabe, maritime program director, at the Hull Lifesaving Museum, 781-925-5433.

Gridders keep on rolling

Football team goes to 4-0 with 35-6 whitewash of Mashpee

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

It's official: the Cohasset football Skippers are a South Shore League force to be reckoned with.

After three season opening wins over weaker non-league opponents, the Skippers had their first SSL match-up last Friday. And they passed their test with flying colors, pummeling the Mashpee Falcons, 34-6.

"It's a great start for us," said fourth year coach Tony Rolfe. "We have always done well outside of the league, but the momentum really helped us get through Friday night."

Cohasset set the tone early, forcing the Falcons to punt on their first possession. It didn't take long after that for senior tailback Jason Brown to begin taking over the game.

Behind outstanding holes from his offensive line, Brown amassed 136 yards and two touchdowns...on his first three carries! He finished the game with 204 yards and four TD's, all of his scores coming in the first half. Behind Daniel Trowers in 1999, Brown became the second Cohasset player in three years to be named Boston Globe star of the week.

"He is taking it to another level," effused Rolfe of Brown's game-breaking speed.

One of the unsung heroes of Brown's success has been the powerful lead blocking of junior fullback Braun Goodson. His combination of size and speed out of the backfield compliment Brown's attack very well.

"This was the best game of a fullback I have seen since I have been here," lauded the coach.

Junior quarterback Mike Snowdale completed five of his nine pass attempts to keep the Mashpee front line honest. His two touchdown passes— to Brown and sophomore wide out Chris Bilodeau— pushed his season total

Quick turnaround for Lady Skippers

Cohasset girls soccer wins first two of season

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

It is truly amazing how quickly things can change in the sports world.

Starting off the season with four straight losses, all to league opponents, the girls soccer team looked to be well on their way to another season in the South Shore League basement. But with two straight SSL wins, things might just turn around.

Cohasset downed Harwich last Saturday, 1-0, and Hull this past Monday, 2-0. The two wins have given new life to the team, possibly to even make a run at the playoffs.

"It is a tremendous load off," confessed fourth year coach Deb Beal following the first win. "Not just for me, but for the girls."

In the Harwich game, the Lady Skippers clearly outplayed the Lady Rough Riders, keeping the ball in Cohasset's offensive end a large portion of the game. In fact, Cohasset opened the game by connecting eleven passes before the opposition even touched the ball.

"We dominated 80 to 90 percent of that game," affirmed Beal.

Although Cohasset had opportunity after opportunity, they were denied time and time again by Harwich's outstanding keeper. With seven minutes left in the game, sophomore Gillian Weber finally sneaked one through, giving her team the win.

Beal noticed the attitude change of her team when it was certain that their zero would be erased from the win column.

"It looked like they were having fun," she explained. "This was 80 minutes of fun."

In the game against the neighboring rivals to the north, Cohasset took down Hull for the second time this year (the girls also beat Hull in a pre-season scrimmage, 4-1).

The first goal was scored on a seemingly impossible shot by senior Becky Ross. Connecting for her first goal of the year, Ross lined up her shot from the touchline and it curled in off the far post.

Weber again scored the backbreaker in this game, increasing her team scoring lead off senior captain Kate Grimm's assist.

Weber is one of four sophomores to start for the squad, along with Jen Buckley, Brenna O'Donnell and Holly Graham. Beal feels their presence has been the driving force behind Cohasset's recent charge.

"The spark is definitely being lit by the sophomores," lauded Beal. "Their attitudes and play on the field have been contagious."

This is Weber's second year as a starter, and her big contributions are now pretty much expected.

"I knew we would get this from Gill," said her coach. "She really wants to win."

Buckley, one of the fastest members of the team, has rapidly improved her game along the sidelines.

"She will make the outside runs, and her crosses are getting much better," Beal complimented.

O'Donnell and Graham form a defensive duo that proved extremely important in cutting off Hull's strikingly speedy forwards.

"Brenna has been huge back there, and there are not many people faster than Holly at [the sweeper] position," said Beal.

Cohasset will try to pull to the .500 mark with games this week against Norwell on Wednesday and Mashpee Friday. Cohasset lost to both of these teams by one goal in the first meetings this season, both extremely hard-fought matches.

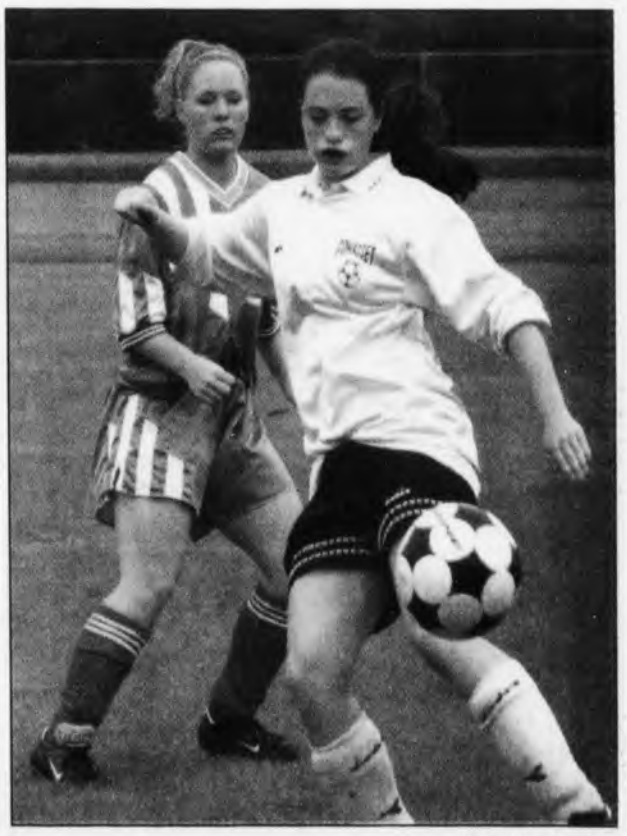
"Momentum is behind us," offered Beal after the second win. "Now we have a little wind in our sails."

Skippers-Clippers showdown

Cohasset vs. Norwell boys soccer showdown played last night

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset boys soccer team was clearly not clicking on all cylinders in their first go-round this season against Norwell.



Injuries and inconsistent play were the bane of coach Dave Nigro's existence back then. And the 2-1 loss, brought about by a Norwell goal with just 15 seconds remaining on the game clock, certainly didn't improve his outlook much—particularly with this making the fourth straight meeting in which the Clippers had prevailed by one goal.

Two weeks later, however, on the eve of the return match with the Clippers in a game that could very well determine the South Shore League championship, the second year Cohasset coach sounded decidedly more at ease with his squad.

"I think Norwell is going to see a different team than it saw a few weeks back," said Nigro. "We've got a few new looks, a few new wrinkles. Bottom line, though, is that we're healthier now and just playing better."

Standouts Matt Bilodeau and Greg O'Connell were each dragging considerably with back injuries in the initial Norwell match, both reduced to shadows of themselves on the field. Fullback Steve Laney and sweeper Dave Hickey were also far from 100 percent, each playing with a leg injury. According to the coach,

Forget the record

C.H.S. field hockey coach sees results that don't show up in standings

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Though the Cohasset field hockey team has been looking for its second win since ever opening this season with a 1-0 decision over Silver Lake on Sept. 7, coach Deb Bostwick insists that her girls are still making steady progress.

Monday's 0-0 tie against South Shore League rival Norwell (2-4-3) bolstered that argument, in the veteran coach's opinion.

"That was absolutely the best game we've played this year," raved Bostwick, whose team moved to 1-4-4 with the tie. "Everything just finally came together for us in that one. In terms of team unity and hard work and passing the ball and creating opportunities and defense, everything just seemed to start rolling our way."

The tale of the tape would seem to bare this out. Cohasset out-shot the visiting Lady Clippers, 13-5, and had 10 corners to Norwell's three.

"We just dominated that game," said Bostwick matter-of-factly. "We did everything right but put the ball in the net."

Indeed, Norwell goalie Emily Hurley turned out to be the star of the game, several of her 13 stops being of the outstanding variety.

The best of several quality Cohasset scoring opportunities came midway through the second half when a penalty strike was awarded to captain Heather Peraino. The junior midfielder labeled the ball for the top right corner, but Hurley flashed out her blocker at the last instant to deflect it wide.

"Obviously, we're all a little disappointed not getting the win," said Bostwick. "But I think we know there are a lot of positives we can take from this game that mean more than one win."

The question now is can these Cohasset girls sustain this recent surge?

"I'll probably piss them by saying it, but yes, I think they can," replied Bostwick. "I feel like we've turned a corner. The girls seem more focused over the last three or four games. I can see it."

This might have something to do with Bostwick's brash move a couple of weeks back made after what the coach perceived to be some warning and inconsistent efforts from her charges — to come up with a contract for her players to sign that formally committed them to "100 percent effort."

"I've started to come down on these girls a little harder than I have on previous teams," admitted Bostwick. "I think it's what they need. We've got a lot of first year players here, and I think I needed to get their attention."

Bostwick still believes this team is capable of making a run to get into the post-season.

"We're only three games under .500 and we've still go half a season to go," she noted. "We've been on the wrong side of a lot of close games. Hopefully, if we continue to show the improvement we have over the last few games, we can gain an edge over those same teams we played tough against the second time around."

Prior to the tie with Norwell, the Lady Skippers had dropped three games in a row against powerhouse squads—Duxbury on Wednesday (a 4-0 loss), Carver on Friday (a 2-0 loss) and Hingham on Saturday (3-1)—who, combined, have half the number of losses as Cohasset.

Cohasset actually took a lead into halftime against Hingham, first year varsity player Sarah Brady redirecting a feed from Peraino into the net two minutes before the break. Seeing her first varsity action in net in place of regular starter Sara Genovese (away for the weekend), sophomore Caitlin Condon came up huge for the Lady Skippers in this first half, turning away several Hingham rushes.

However, Hingham came out flying to open the second half, throwing a merciless barrage at the untested keeper. As Bostwick's put it: "the sleeping giants woke up."

The Harborwomen tied the game at the 7:10 mark off of a corner, and then took the lead for good on another corner 11 minutes later. The real backbreaker came with just over two minutes remaining, however, with the Skippers taking chances as they pushed hard for a rush that might net them the equalizer.

With defensive stalwart Jackie Goines out of action due to illness for this game, coach Bostwick had particularly strong post-game praise for fullbacks Suzanne Lynner, Sarah Dennis and Kimmy Ulmer, and, of course, Condon.

"I know Caitlin was down on herself after those three second half goals, but she really shouldn't have been," said Bostwick. "For her first time out at the varsity level she did a remarkable job, and everyone there agreed with that. Her teammates, the opposing coaches, and even the refs said that."

Summing up the week's worth of action, Bostwick said: "I was proud of the way the girls battled in all of these games. They showed some character by fighting all the way to the end. In the end, that's what's going to make us a better team."

Field Hockey Notes

Lack of practice facilities a factor

Having lost 11 key plays to graduation from the team that advances to the sectional quarterfinals last fall, Bostwick was been forced to teach on the fly most of this season.

"We have talent, but it takes time to develop the type of skills we had last year," she said. "and the types of skills teams like Duxbury and Hingham have now."

That process has been impeded somewhat this fall be the lack of adequate field facilities. One of the early casualties of the ongoing construction projects at Cohasset High was the elimination of the field hockey team's practice facility at the front of the school. Now, the girls are forced to utilize unused corners at Milliken Field, doing their best not to get in the way of the other C.H.S. fall athletic teams.

"It's no one's fault," asserted Botwick. "This project is necessary for the betterment of the school, but right now it's hurting us. The terrain we've had in practices has just been terrible. That really hurts when you're trying to work on your drives and passing."

Bostwick couldn't help but to feel a little envious when she saw the plush and finely manicured practice field at Duxbury High last week.

"You see the way Duxbury moves the ball so smoothly and so quickly, and you know having a field like that to practice on has so much to do with it," she reasoned.

Genovese shines

In the 2-0 loss to South Shore leading Carver (6-1, 3-0), Cohasset goalie Sara Genovese was immense, stopping 20 of the 22 shots thrown on net by the high flying Crusaders.

"Sara came to play in this one," said Bostwick. "Carver is a much improved team, and Sara was the player who kept us in it to the end."

Picking it up

Bostwick also wished to acknowledge the improved play of late by Brady, Deanna Brown, Lindsay Grossman, Jessie Guild and forward Rachel Smith.

Skippers-Clippers showdown, part II

these four are now all the way back or close to their pre-injury form.

By the time anyone reads this, unfortunately, this showdown will have been played. It was scheduled to go off at 5 p.m. Wednesday, about the same time this paper went to print—so coach Nigro could come out looking real good.

Chances are, he won't come out looking too bad regardless of how the game plays out. After all, the way his team has been playing of late, who can blame him for feeling a trifle more optimistic than he did two weeks ago?

On Saturday, the Skippers played arguably their best 80 minutes of the season in beating Harwich, 2-1. The game was not as close as the score might indicate. Cohasset maintained a decided territorial edge throughout the contest, and only the white-hot play between the pipes by Harwich sophomore keeper Joey Zabielski kept the score respectable.

"We were just moving the ball so well in that game and against a good team," said Nigro. "We were consistently creating nice opportunities, but I've really got to hand it to (Zabielski). He came up with 10 or 11 quality stops in that game, which is something you hardly ever see in a high school soccer game."

Dan Kinchla finally broke through three minutes before halftime, finishing off a nice feed from captain Matt Bilodeau.

The Skippers continued to mount the pressure in the second half, but a Tim Baird tally near the midpoint was all they could sneak past the whirling dervish in goal. With Harwich joining the South Shore League this season, the Skippers can look forward to at least five more meetings with Zabielski.

Harwich finally managed to break through on a direct kick from just outside the box with approximately two minutes remaining in the game. The Rough Ryders live action opportunities were few and far between, though, and this game never truly seemed to be much in doubt.

The story in Monday's 6-1 win over Hull was similar, even after the host Pirates scored a quick goal at the start of the second half to tie it at 1-1. The Skippers bounced back quickly to score three goals in the next 10 minutes to take statistical control of the game they seemed to have well in their grasp almost from the opening whistle. Chris Clark led the way with a pair of tallies, and teammates Bilodeau, Kahn, Baird and Dave Hickey all chipped in one apiece.

With the win over Hull, Cohasset improved to 5-2-1 overall on the season and 4-1-1 in South Shore League play, the Norwell setback standing as the lone loss on their the league mark. Norwell is 6-0-1 in league (7-0-2 overall), so a win by the Skippers Wednesday night would knot up the two teams in the tie and loss columns, as well as negate the head-to-head advantage.

Golfer shutout by Mashpee

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset golf team fell to 1-4-1 on Monday, as they proved no match for Mashpee.

"Those Cape teams are tough," said Cohasset head coach Torin Sweeney, referring to South Shore League newcomers Mashpee and Harwich. "They've definitely changed the landscape of our league. Their kids all belong to country clubs, and golf just seems to be a big part of the culture down there with all those courses around."

Cohasset freshman DJ Silvia continued his excellent campaign as the Skippers top golfer, shooting a three-over-par 39 at the Cohasset Country Clubm, but his counterpart got the better of him with a nine-hole round of 37.

The C.H.S. golfers host Abington today (Thursday) and travel south to take on the other cape monster, Harwich, next week in the makeup of a Sept. 25 rainout.

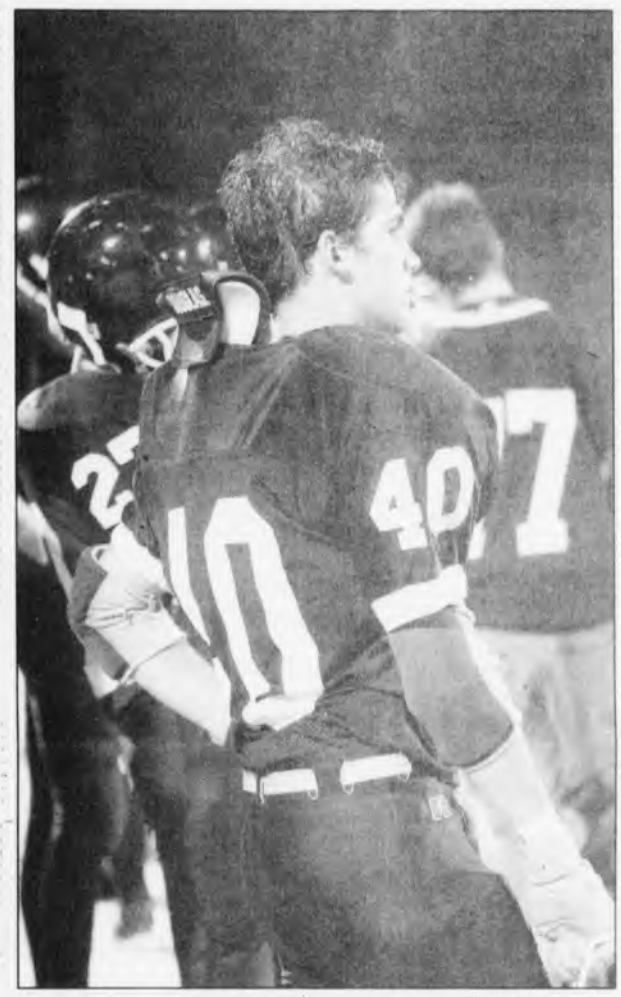
to seven, tops among Div. 5 QBs.

Bilodeau and junior receiver Tom Anderson combine to make one of the highest scoring receiving tandems in the division. Their presence has been enormous this year, since the losses of seniors Nick Bolster and Liam Martin made many think that a legitimate passing game was a lost cause.

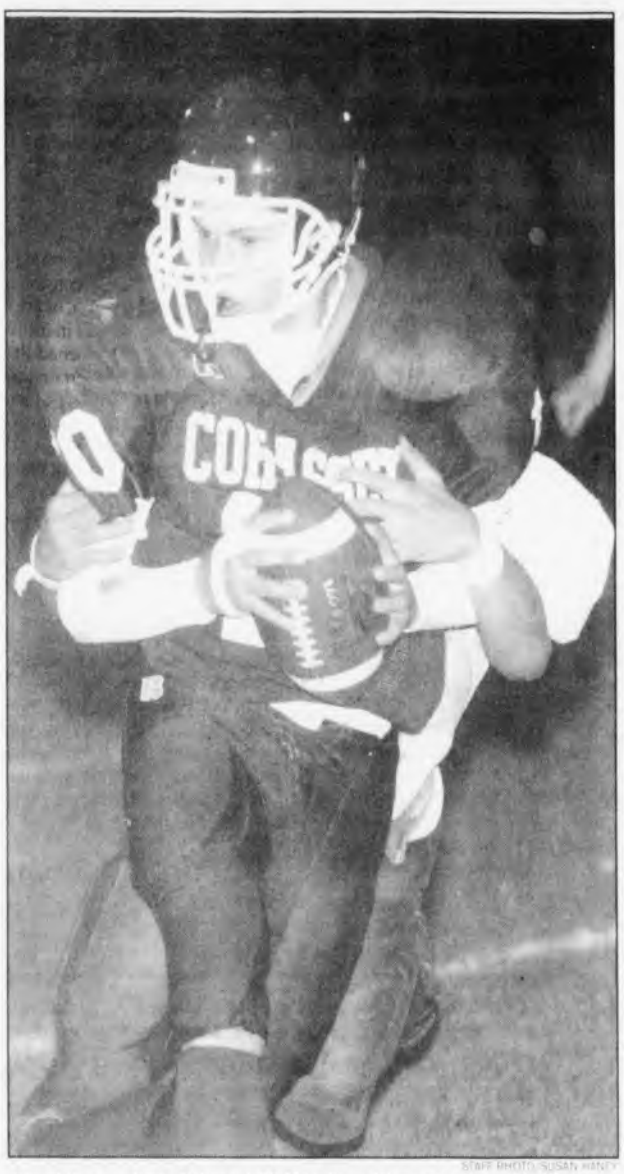
"I feel like we lost the two best receivers in the league, and replaced them with the next best two," assessed Rolfe.



Cohasset's defense again kept their opponent to only one score, a 57-yard touchdown scamper by senior halfback Dan Holt. Other than that, Mashpee's ground game was shut down. Falcon senior quarterback Jeff Young was held to two completions on 11 tries.

"The defense really did an outstanding job," complimented the coach, whose squad has given up a total of 19 points through four games. "We are at a point where we are upset when we give up first downs."

This week, Cohasset has the opportunity to get into a good position to contend for a South Shore League crown, taking on defending SSL champion Carver. Though Carver was hit extremely hard by graduation and already has one league loss, Rolfe knows this is not the time to slack off.



"I think we have to maintain this level of play," he said.

With the level of play this team has right now, that should prove to be winning advice.

Football game Notes

(Yes, the inevitable return of the "fun facts" section.)

- In the first half, Mashpee fumbled on three consecutive possessions, totaling four in the game.

- In the first quarter, Anderson missed a PAT for the first time this year. He is now 12-of-13 for the season.

- The teams combined for only three penalties, Cohasset only getting charged with a pass interference call late in the third quarter.

- This was the first game no Skipper recorded an interception.

- Junior John Durkin caught only one pass, but it was enough to give him more receiving yards than all other Skipper receivers combined.

Coastal Stars "Game of the Week"

There is a comforting familiarity shared by several Marshfield and Cohasset parents as a result of their many hours of huddling with each other at frozen rinks from Martha's Vineyard to Lake Placid.

For the past few years, the Bents, Crowleys, Gomez's, Hernons, Kelleys, Labos and McPhersons of Marshfield, along with the Ulmers of Cohasset, have cheered their children through their Mite years to this years Squirt level, where their children make up the core of the Coastal Stars' elite Squirt team, the Squirt A team.

In this season's inaugural game, this past Sat. evening, the Stars gave their parents plenty to cheer about as they beat the Taunton Brewins 4-0.

Head coach Joe McPherson, who is assisted by his longtime colleagues, John Hernon and Dan Bent, was thrilled with the team's effort , particularly the defensive play of Max Labo, Pat Lema, Rich Cuqua and David Gomez who held the usually potent Taunton attack scoreless.

Coach McPherson said the game's defensive tone was set by goalie Shane Ricci, an import from Pembroke, who stopped a 2-on-0 breakaway at a critical point in a scoreless game.

Having established themselves defensively, the Stars set about creating some offense. After a scoreless first, the Stars got two quick goals. Eric Wiedemann got the first tally off of a beautiful pass from winger Korey McPherson who dug the puck free from a pile up in front of the net. Dan Bent followed with his first goal two minutes later.

The hustle of first year players Brendan Doonan and Mike Sweeney combined with the always dependable effort of Paul Kelley kept the score in the Stars favor up to the end of the second period.

Shortly after the puck dropped to start the third period , veteran Bryan Hernon, who for years has demonstrated an ability to put the puck in the net, put the Stars up 3-0 on a power play goal. The game was put away later in the third period when Korey McPherson notched his second assist, laying a pass into the slot for hard charging defenseman Pat Lema, who rushed in from his position on the blue line to roof one past the sprawling Taunton goalie.

Veterans John Crowley and Tim Grahm contributed greatly to the effort with their aggressive two-way play.

An exuberant coach McPherson said: "This was a fantastic game with a superb team effort."

For this hearty group of parents this was another game at another frozen rink with an outcome that had them all smiling.

POLICE BRIEFS

Youths arrested

Police say a clearing in a wooded area along the old rail bed in the village between the town parking lot and Spring Street is a gathering place for youths with alcohol and drugs.

During an investigation in that area at 5:15 p.m. last Wednesday, police discovered three Cohasset youths, who now face charges of minor transport alcohol and illegal possession of a Class D substance [marijuana]. The 16-year-old juvenile was also charged with possession of a Class B substance [Dexedrine tablets] with intent to distribute. Initial charges of conspiracy to violate controlled substance laws against all three youths were withdrawn because after review, there was not enough evidence to support the allegation, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

Arrested were Matthew M. Corry, 17, of 81 Pleasant St.; Joseph J. Niessink, 17, of 40 Forest Ave., and a 16-year-old boy of Cohasset, whose name is withheld because of his age. Police say all three showed signs of intoxication.

At the scene police found a half-full liter bottle of gin and a two-liter bottle of ginger ale. Further investigation revealed a quantity of marijuana and marijuana paraphernalia. The 16-year-old also had a quantity of what police believe were Dexedrine tablets on his person. Dexedrine is a stimulant and can be abused. Police also said the manner in which the tablets were packaged led them to believe they were intended for sale to others.

The arraignment for Corry and Niessink was continued until Oct. 9 at Quincy District Court. The juvenile was scheduled to be arraigned yesterday [Oct. 3] in juvenile court as the Mariner went to press.

Paint ball rules

Cohasset police say groups of minors have been discharging paint-ball guns in public places in violation of state law. Sgt. Robert Jackson said paint-ball guns have been determined to be the equivalent of air guns by the State Police Ballistics Lab. Therefore, it is illegal to sell a paint-ball gun to minor under the age of 18 and it is illegal for these guns to be discharged in public places unless the minor is accompanied by an adult. Police can confiscate the guns being used in violation of state law, identify the violators and forward incident reports to the prosecutor for review.

BUSINESS

POST helps people get back on track

Physical therapy business opens

By Jim Logan
CORRESPONDENT

Whether you're a 16-year-old high school football star, a 40-, 50-, or even 80-something athlete, there's a new, four-letter acronym around town you might want to keep handy for future reference.

The name of the entity is POST (Prescription, Orthopedic and Sports Training) and owners Al Blaisdell and Peter Stone, who together share more than 35 years experience in the area of physical therapy, want to help you get back on track and stay on track.

"That's really our main goal, our focus," says the 36-year-old Blaisdell, whose 10-plus years of expertise in the field of "PT" [personal training] includes Blaisdell's role as the present-day trainer for athletes at Hingham High School. "No matter what a particular person is in need of, whether it be say, massaging or therapy for someone who's sustained injury — or training someone to [optimize] their abilities — our job is to provide a continuum of the best care possible for the people who see us."

Stone, who brings more than 25 years of skill and knowledge to the POST practice, says customer service is one of their strengths.

"We like to think of ourselves a sort of a throwback to older times, when 'patient care' really meant that," says Stone, 47. "Patient care really does matter to us."

Cohasset's new sports therapy and training center combines hands-on treatment and supervised exercise therapy. Here Peter Stone, front, and Al Blaisdell, rear, assist clients.

Stone and Blaisdell say they saw a need for the type of one-on-one therapeutic services they provide on the South Shore area and, in April opened the doors to POST's second facility in Cohasset. [Stone opened up in Brookline a few years ago]. Both men agree the latest POST endeavor presents a great opportunity— not only for them, but the community as well.

"We feel like we're going to be [valuable] to the area in that, in addition to working with someone's primary-care physician or other doctor, people will also have somebody else whose goal is to say, work with them from the acute onset of a problem and, continue helping until they're able to go back to wherever they were and whatever they were doing," Blaisdell says.

When one first walks through the door to POST (in the new Cohasset Family Health building off Rt. 3A), Stone says one can be assured of not only receiving a complete and thorough assessment of his or her particular case — be that a problem or a desire for more strength and conditioning — but also a personalized program custom-tailored his or her particular needs.

"From the very beginning when we work with someone, whether it's through exercise or [therapies], we really want to help people get back (to normal)," Stone says. "When you're working with somebody, and they have that sense that you really care about the things that are going on it makes them feel very good. Very comfortable."

Though relatively new to the South Shore region from the POST business perspective, Blaisdell and Stone have ties to the community. Stone resides in Cohasset; Blaisdell in Hingham.

"In the six months since we've opened, we've already started building a name through the doctors who've referred us, plus through the [contacts] Al has as the physical trainer for Hingham High School," Stone says. "People are getting to know who we are and what we do and, things have been very good so far. We're very happy with how the business has already grown down here."

Market Message starts operations

The Market Message Company has formally launched operations in Cohasset.

Market Message is an editorial service for marketing and public relations in technology companies and emerging ventures. It specializes in clarifying sophisticated technical subjects and communicating complex business concepts.

Market Message helps companies reduce outside agency costs while continuing to communicate high-level concepts effectively to key audiences.

Cartoons meet canvas

Pembroke artist Brooks Kelly creates 'A Touch of Whimsy'

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Brooks Kelly will always be a cartoonist at heart, but his real passion these days is painting with acrylics.

Kelly, 66, a Pembroke resident for nearly 40 years, began his art career as a hobby at the age of 15, but it has blossomed into something much bigger.

Recently, Kelly celebrated his third "Best Pembroke Artist" award from the Pembroke Arts Festival and right now he's being featured in a one-man show called "A Touch of Whimsy" at the James Library in Norwell through Oct. 31.

"There's about 50 pieces in the show," Kelly said. "There's a lot of colorful stuff included."

When Kelly was 15, he discovered his talent for being a cartoonist, and he started doing a weekly sports cartoon for a for a newspaper in Cape Cod, where he was living at the time. Even though drawing cartoons is only something he does in his spare time these days, Kelly said the cartoon style is incorporated into many of his works.

"I still see things through a cartoonist's eyes," Kelly said. "Much of my work is very colorful, and it has become much more colorful in recent years. Some people have described my work as impressionistic expressionistic."

Kelly works in acrylics for his paintings, but he also enjoys using innovative techniques. In addition to paint, he uses materials like paper doilies, wallpaper, sand, boxes, movie tickets, and even the daily personal pages for texture.

"When I first started painting, I found myself unsatisfied with just using paint," Kelly said. "I wanted to do something extra."

Kelly said he uses a lot of his life experience to influence his work. After he left his home on Cape Cod, he went to college in Pittsburgh where he majored in graphic design. In the 1950s, Kelly joined the U.S. Army and found himself stationed in Paris. While he was there, he discovered he had a lot of free time, so he started exploring museums and fell in love with art.

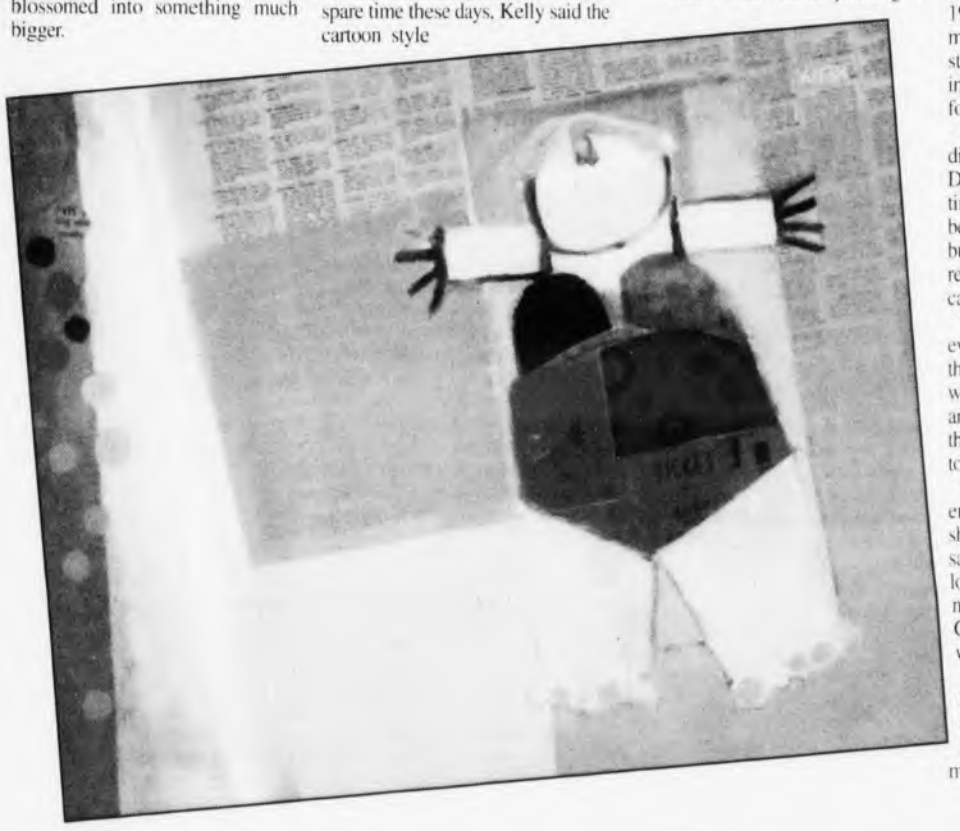
After he got out of the Army, he went back and finished his college education, receiving his degree in 1960. By that time, Kelly had moved to the South Shore, and he started getting back into the cartoon industry. He drew a weekly cartoon for the Silver Lake News.

In 1974, Kelly became executive director of the Plymouth County Development Council. During that time, Kelly was painting on the side because his job kept him extremely busy. But three years ago, Kelly retired and began a full-time career in painting.

"I've been painting up a storm ever since then," he said. Within the confines of much of his work, there is a lot of humor, and artistic audiences around the South Shore have responded to his unique style.

"I think paintings are to be enjoyed, not things which should be awe-inspiring," he said. Kelly said he enjoys using loud colors in his work, a technique he picked up on the Caribbean island of Anguilla where he visits every year.

"When I go to the Caribbean, I find myself overwhelmed by the colors that exist there, and that certainly has influenced my palate," he said.



One of Kelly's most famous works to date is called "Pink Lady," a Picasso-like portrait of an overweight woman lying down on a towel at the beach. The painting is a fine example of Kelly's work as it uses his traditional sense of texture and color. And like much of his work, "Pink Lady" has a story behind it.

"One time I was at the beach smoking a cigar, and the next minute, a large woman came over to me and told me she objected to my smoking it," Kelly said. "I've been getting vengeance ever since with the painting."

Kelly said there are many paintings of "fat ladies" at the James Library show and a number of other painting he has done. He has another show coming up at the Silver Spoon in Cohasset in early October.

"I'm just going to keep painting, and keep trying to get a little better every day," he said.

For more information on Kelly's show, call the James Library at (781) 659-7100. The opening reception for the show is on Oct. 12 from 7-9 p.m.. To view Kelly's work online go to http://members.aol.com/bkellyart.

Brooks Kelly's cartoon-like artistic style is in the forefront at the James Library in Norwell through the month of October. The public will be able to check out some of his most famous works including the "Pink Lady (far left).

Southern rock heads north

Southern Rock Rebellion headlines at Vincent's Oct. 10

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

"Our show is not just a tribute to Southern Rock as people sometimes think of it, but to straight-out, good-time, high-energy rock 'n' roll of the era that just happened to be from the South. But we haven't mellowed over time. We're playing the music the way it was meant to be played, with the vocals, guitars, rhythm section, everything strong."

That's Charlie Hargrett, former lead guitarist with 1970s-80s Dixie rockers Blackfoot, on his current band project The Southern Rock Rebellion, an homage to the golden era of Southern rock also containing ex-members of two other major bands of the sub-genre, The Outlaws and Molly Hatchet, and currently on a club tour of the East Coast that swings into Vincent's in Randolph Oct. 10 as the next installment of the Wednesdays Rock! series

But as Hargrett's words imply, don't expect any stale nostalgic tribute or Southern rock "oldies" show from this ensemble of veteran Rebel-rockin' brothers. The ex-Blackfoot axe man promises fans old and new that the music will be as alive, vibrant and high-powered as it was when the Southern sound rocked arenas and festivals two to three decades ago.

Along with Hargrett, Southern Rock Rebellion includes guitarist/bassist/vocalist Buzzy Meekins, an original member of the Outlaws ("Green Grass and High Tides," "There Goes Another Love Song"); guitarist/vocalist Steve Wheeler, a veteran of Molly Hatchet ("Flirtin' With Disaster") and the self-named band of Hatchet lead vocalist Danny Joe Brown; lead vocalist Harlie Perryman, a seasoned frontman formerly of the regionally popular Dixie-rock band Arson; and drummer Shawn Beamer, who's performed behind Southern blues legend Lazy Lester, Stephen Stills and Jerry Lee Lewis among others. SRB's live sets draw from a wealth of Southern rock repertiore including songs by Blackfoot, the Outlaws, Molly Hatchet and the Brown Band as well as Lynyrd Skynyrd, the Allman Brothers, Atlanta Rhythm Section and more.

Buzzy Meekins, Harlie Perryman, Steve Wheeler, Charlie Hargrett and Shawn Beamer make up the Southern Rock Rebellion. The group will perform Oct. 10 as part of Vincent's in Randolph's "Wednesdays Rock!" series

"This band reminds me of Blackfoot more than anything," said Hargrett. "In Blackfoot, we certainly had all the classic Southern rock elements — blues, country, gospel and rockabilly — that came together and created a whole new interesting sound back in the 70s. Onstage, the band format is familiar, with two guitars, bass, drums and a vocalist/frontman, with lots of interplay and a strong sense of musical adventure, like the double-guitar harmony leads that were always a signature of Southern rock, for example."

"But we're not necessarily limited to what people knew then and now as Southern rock. Blackfoot, for instance, was more than most of the other Southern bands influenced by the heavy British bands of the era, such as the Who and Led Zeppelin at first and later bands like Iron Maiden and Motorhead. We toured the U.K. and Europe quite a bit and met and played with most of these bands. And we tried to take the Southern sound and match it with their power and musical styles. This new band project has a lot of those same values, and so onstage, our set's not always carved in stone and we don't necessarily do what people expect," Hargrett said.

Formed in Jacksonville, Florida in 1969, Blackfoot enjoyed a gold- and platinum-selling career through the 70s and early 80s, led by singer/guitarist front man Rick Medlocke, who was the original drummer with Lynyrd Skynyrd before deciding to step to the front of the stage and form his own band. Hargrett, a founding member, was a transplanted New Yorker who earned the distinction of being the lone Yank in a band of proverbial wild-eyed Southern boys.

Many of Blackfoot's best-remembered songs also highlight SRB's live sets. Among them, "Highway Song," which for Blackfoot was a show stopping guitar-jam epic much like "Free Bird" for Lynyrd Skynyrd and "Green Grass and High Tides" for the Outlaws, plus the 70s-80s Top 40 hits "Train Train" and "Fly Away."

One more early Blackfoot song, first released on the band's Strikes LP in 1979, will offer a timely theme for the current crisis, a cover of Free's "Wishing Well," which contains the lines "But I know what you're wishing for/Life in a peaceful world." Knowing Southern rock by its very nature as a Rebel music, in regard to the present sociopolitical climate, SRB's set will surely convey an overall feeling of peace but pride.

Near Dead experience

Cohasset's deLima takes the stage in James Joyce drama

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

It may be an understudy's dream to go on for the lead in a play or musical, but actress Sarah deLima's recent experience at the Huntington Theatre would have been most actor's worst nightmare.

The South Shore audience favorite is an understudy in the current Boston production of "James Joyce's The Dead." Since understudy rehearsals are not held until after a show's first preview, deLima was forced to memorize her lines and go on with virtually no rehearsal when actress Alice Cannon temporarily left the show just before the musical's first performance.

Cohasset native Sarah deLima plays Aunt Kate in the Boston production of James Joyce's "The Dead."

"As an understudy, you are not even required to know your lines or learn the blocking before the first preview," deLima explained by telephone last week from her Cohasset home. It was Thursday, Sept. 6, when deLima learned that she would be going on as Aunt Kate in that evening's invitation-only final dress rehearsal and the show's first weekend of previews. (As Living went to press, deLima had appeared in seven performances of "James Joyce's The Dead.)

"Fortunately for me, I had sat in on virtually every rehearsal," deLima recalls. "I was very interested in the director, Richard Nelson, and seeing how he worked. So luckily, I had been privy to the creative process from the very beginning. Indeed, the entire company had been wonderful to me. They had gone out of their way to include me, even though I was just an understudy."

The actress is not alone in her admiration for Richard Nelson, who also adapted the short story by James Joyce to its current theatrical format and earned a Tony award nomination for his efforts.. The show features music by Shaun Davey, with lyrics by Davey and Nelson. Presented last season on Broadway, "James Joyce's The Dead" comes to Boston following an acclaimed national tour. The musical takes place during a Christmas party on a snowy Dublin night and is a touching journey into love and laughter, melancholy and music.

"This is a play about family and friends," deLima says. "In many ways the cast has become just that to me, too. This production came here, fully cast, from New York so I've been very lucky to be a part of it in any way. I was also very fortunate to get an unexpected, unusual gift from the director. Normally, an understudy is supposed to just emulate the actor he or she is replacing. Richard Nelson, however, encouraged me to do my own take on Aunt Kate. Richard trusted me and showed me a huge kindness. He helped to give me an experience I will never forget."

("James Joyce's The Dead" is being presented at the Huntington Theatre, 264 Huntington Avenue, Boston. For tickets and information, please call 617/266-0800.)

The cream cheese soufflé

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Most soufflés are no more than whipped egg whites folded into a simple white sauce (a bechamel) or a similar mixture of milk, flour, and butter. The mixture is then baked and the resulting dessert is light, creamy at the center and delicate. However, soufflés can also be made with a variety of "alternative" bases.

I tested a few, including applesauce, pureed bananas, and even apricot baby food (it seemed like a good idea at the time) but the one ingredient that outshined the rest was cream cheese. It has enough substance to work much like a béchamel, but it provides more flavor and texture.

However, a cream cheese soufflé is quite different than the standard French construct so I needed to perform a series of tests. For starters, I found that, to lighten the mixture, I had to beat the egg yolks with sugar and then add the cream cheese which is also whipped. When I simply added yolks to the cream cheese and then tried to fold in beaten egg whites, the mixture was much too heavy. I also found that room temperature cream cheese was essential since cold cheese is difficult to aerate while beating. I then experimented with other ingredients and found that a half cup of heavy cream was helpful in lightening the cream cheese mixture. I also liked just one tablespoon of melted butter for flavor along with a teaspoon of vanilla. Finally, I played around with additional flavorings and remembered a recipe from Cook's Magazine from the 1980's that called for ground cardamom. I tried it here and loved it. It adds an unusual but complementary flavor to the cream cheese. You can, if you like, serve this dessert with a fruit sauce. (puree fresh or defrosted frozen fruit with some superfine sugar.) However, it is perfectly fine on its own with a good cup of coffee or espresso.

CREAM CHEESE SOUFFLE Note that cream cheese soufflés have a rather smooth, tough-looking top, unlike the more extravagant visuals offered by classic soufflés. Inside, however, the soufflé is rich and exciting. It is very important to leave the center of this soufflé runny; the still liquid cream cheese makes its own sauce.

Butter and sugar to coat soufflé dish or ramekins
3 egg yolks, room temperature
1/2 cup powdered sugar
8 ounces cream cheese, room temperature
1 tablespoon flour
1/2 cup heavy cream
1 tablespoon melted butter
1 teaspoon vanilla
1/4 teaspoon ground cardamom
Pinch of salt
5 egg whites, room temperature preferred
1/4 teaspoon cream of tartar
1 tablespoon granulated sugar

1. Heat oven to 350 degrees. Coat soufflé dish or ramekins with butter and sugar.

2. Beat the yolks and powdered sugar together with an electric mixer until light yellow and fluffy, 2 to 3 minutes. Add cream cheese and continue beating until light and fluffy, another 2 minutes. Add flour, heavy cream, melted butter, vanilla, cardamom, and salt. Mix until just combined.

3.Add the egg whites to a large metal mixing bowl. Whip on medium high speed (setting 6 on the KitchenAid) for 30 seconds, add the cream of tartar, and then add the 1 tablespoon sugar gradually, beating until the whites hold a 2-inch peak. They should still be soft and glossy.

4. Fold the egg whites into the cream cheese mixture with a large rubber spatula. Gently add the soufflé mixture to the prepared dish(es) and bake for about 18 minutes for individual ramekins and 20 to 25 minutes for a soufflé dish. The center should still be very moist and a bit loose. (Soufflés may be checked. Remove from oven, use two large spoons to cut a small hole in the center. If not cooked, place back in oven.)

5. Serve as is or with a fruit sauce. Serves 6 to 8

SATURDAY, OCT. 6

An inactive Taurus moon sets a relaxed, leisurely pace this morning. Take it slow and easy. Influences turn around completely at 11:12 a.m. when the moon enters lively Gemini. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Gemini, travels in retrograde motion. That means that there are likely to be unexpected delays, changes in plans, breakdowns. Be more spontaneous and easygoing. Keep it light.

SUNDAY, OCT. 7

This day has its ups and downs. The dualistic Gemini moon forms challenging alignments to Pluto at 11:31 a.m. and Saturn at 2:48 p.m. The Libra sun aligns with Jupiter at 4:08 p.m. and Saturn at 9:56 p.m. To get the best of today's influences, change your routine and do something different. Forget recent pressures and concentrate on recharging your batteries.

MONDAY, OCT. 8

The moon continues to travel in Gemini, prompting you to let fun and games top your agenda today. Sleep on new ideas; don't make important decisions or purchases. Instead, pursue favorite sports, hobbies; spend quality time with friends and family. The moon aligns with Mercury at 12:24 p.m. and becomes inactive until 6:19 p.m., when it enters the sign Cancer.

TUESDAY, OCT. 9

The moon travels in the sign Cancer today, placing a focus on home, family, domestic responsibilities. Influences are prime for making repairs, remodeling, renovating. Clean out and reorganize; beautify your surroundings. A lunar alignment to Jupiter makes this evening prime for sharing a special dinner with friends and loved ones.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 10

The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 12:20 a.m. The moon will decrease in light until October 16, when the Libra new moon occurs. Today the Cancer moon continues active travel until 1:47 p.m., when it aligns with Mercury. Others may be moody, hypersensitive. Choose your words carefully. Give loved ones extra strokes. Cleaning and repair projects continue to get the green light. The moon enters playful Leo at 10:54 p.m.

THURSDAY, OCT. 11

It may take a while for the morning fog to burn off. A lunar opposition to Neptune is in effect until mid-morning. Slow down and allow extra time to get where you are going. Potentially difficult influences pass over by 10:30 a.m., and the remainder of the day rates high for getting things done. Take on a full work agenda; you can be most productive. The moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn this evening, offering an opportunity to compose your thoughts, reflect, refocus.

Fall planting projects

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

A sweet perfume permeates the air, drifting from a myriad of starry white blossoms which completely smother the twining stems of the sweet autumn clematis (C. paniculata) as it gracefully cascades over silver-gray fence rails, spilling into the garden below. Large, satiny goblets of lavender-pink autumn crocuses (Colchicum) glisten in the morning sunlight. Cinnamon-tinted, feathery plumes sway in a gentle breeze above the finely-textured blades of Japanese silver grasses (Miscanthus spp.). Elegant, architectural clumps of these handsome ornamental grasses serve as focal points throughout the landscape providing sound, motion, color and texture during the stark, gray days of winter. While many plants in the fall landscape are in decline, others continue to flourish, contributing fall beauty through colorful flowers, fruit or foliage, exfoliating bark and attractive seed pods.

Autumn is an ideal time for planting. Take advantage of warm, dry, workable soils to divide and transplant perennials, plant bulbs, relocate a variety of trees and shrubs and prepare new gardens. Although air temperatures may become rather chilly in the weeks to come, soil temperatures drop more gradually and the roots of seemingly dormant plants continue to grow and absorb water and nutrients until the ground freezes.

Daylilies, Siberian iris, and Japanese iris can be divided in either spring or fall, but those which are separated in autumn are more likely to bloom the following year. Large clumps of hosta may be easier to split when their noses are just poking through the soil in spring, but fall division enables hosta plants to regain their symmetrical form and stature by the next growing season. As a general rule, divide and transplant spring blooming perennials in fall and fall-bloomers in spring. Those which produce flowers in midsummer may be separated in either season. Perennials which are divided later in the season will benefit from the application of a light winter mulch to prevent heaving due to alternate freezing and thawing cycles.

Autumn is the preferred season to transplant or divide peonies. These long-lived perennials rarely require division but are easily propagated should you wish to establish new clumps. Plants which fail to produce flower buds may be planted too deeply, receive insufficient sunlight or may be starved of nutrients due to excessive root competition from nearby plants or soil depletion over many years.

Lift the entire clump with a spading fork and air dry until the soil can be carefully brushed away from the tree-like roots to reveal their reddish-pink buds, referred to as "eyes". Use a sharp knife or clippers to cut the fleshy roots into smaller pieces. Each division should contain at least three to five eyes to ensure flowering the following spring.

Peonies prefer a deep, rich, well-drained, slightly acidic loam generously amended with organic material in the form of compost or well-decomposed manure. While they tend to perform best in sunny locations, they can tolerate light shade as long as they are not planted too closely to large shrubs or trees which will compete for moisture and nutrients. Prepare a hole twice as wide as the peony's root system. The addition of superphosphate to your amended soil will promote a strong root system and maximize flower production. Planting depth is critical to ensure blooms in subsequent years. Hold the peony roots with one hand while backfilling with the other. The pink eyes should be facing upward at a depth no more than one to two inches below the surface. Gently tamp the soil and water well. Apply a light, airy mulch of pine needles, salt marsh hay, shredded leaves or evergreen branches in December after the ground freezes to prevent heaving during the first winter.

No garden seems complete without quantities of spring-flowering bulbs and fall is the season for planting these springtime miracles. Success with bulbs begins with the all important process of selecting healthy, top quality stock. Choose firm bulbs which are free of soft spots, deep cuts or blemishes. Do not be concerned by small nicks or the loss of the papery brown covering known as a tunic found on tulips, daffodils or crocuses as this will not adversely affect the development of the bulbs. Select the largest specimens of each type of bulb or in the case of daffodils, ones having multiple noses as these will most likely produce larger or more flowers.

All bulbs prefer loose, porous soils with excellent drainage to prevent rotting during dormancy. Soils comprised of sandy loam are ideal. The addition of organic material, including peat moss or compost, will improve drainage in heavy soils. Raised beds may necessary in low, damp locales. Loosen and prepare the soil prior to planting so the roots of the bulbs can develop easily.

While bulbs contain all the nutrients they require to flower the first year, to continue healthy growth and flowering, bulbs need phosphorus, a mineral which moves very slowly through the soil. To ensure its availability in future seasons, mix a teaspoon of superphosphate or bulb booster in the soil at the bottom of the planting hole. Although bone meal serves as an alternative, organic source of this nutrient, you may wish to avoid its use as animals often detect its scent and dig up your newly planted bulbs. Be sure to firm the soil and water well after planting.

Memorial to be dedicated Nov. 11

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

With America waking up to the dawn of new war, the remembrance past hostilities seem ever more important. The dedication of the Gold Star Mothers Memorial is a month away, a sobering reminder of the tragedy of war.

"There's a whole generation who do not know the importance of veterans. It's always been something past generations had to keep in mind," explained Glenn Pratt, a Woodside Cemetery Expansion Committee member.

The monument at Woodside is designed to be the focal point of the expansion of the cemetery which is underway.

The American Gold Star Mothers is an organization open to any mothers who have lost children in the service since World War I, and works closely with and is respected by all veterans organizations Cohasset has had a total of 22 Gold Star Mothers, three of whom — June Simeone, Elizabeth Maree, and Mary Reardon — who lost sons in Vietnam, still live in town.

The non-profit, patriotic organization was granted a charter in 1929, in order to perpetuate the ideals of America for which their children had died.

Shopping for water

Mass-American looks to buy from Cohasset

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset has plenty to spare and Hingham potentially won't have enough. That's the scenario setting the stage for the possibility of Cohasset's municipal water department selling some of its treated water to Massachusetts-American Water Company.

Mass-American, a private company, serves about 38,000 residents in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset.

John K. McNabb Jr., chairman of the Cohasset Water Commission, said Mass-American approached the commission back in July to talk about buying water from Cohasset.

"There are a number of development projects in Hingham that take more water than they have," he said. McNabb said Mass-American would like to buy 500,000 gallons of water a day.

Eileen Commiane, operations manager at Mass-American, confirmed the "main driver" behind the request, which she describes as "preliminary," are some of the proposed projects including the Hingham Shipyard.

Cohasset, whose water supply includes the Aaron River Reservoir and Lily Pond, uses an average of 680,000 gallons a day. The system has a "safe yield" of 3.5 million

Security conscious

Town says it's ready for potential problems

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Although it's business as usual in Cohasset, there is an uneasiness behind the scenes.

Meetings still take place at Town Hall and firefighters and police officers work their usual shifts. Schoolchildren still play at recess in the crisp fall air. And the foliage looks as if a paint store exploded at Lily Pond.

But no one can escape the news about America's new war, one that has already hit home with the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11.

"Life has changed forever," Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said. "Everyone is on a heightened state of alert — all you have to do is watch TV to see what's happening."

For the younger generations, these attacks have served as a wake up call from the dreamy peacefulness that they formerly knew. For older generations the attacks were reminiscent of previous wars, something they wished their children would never have to fathom.

"The country has a lot to learn about protecting itself," said Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed. He also said he's confident that Cohasset has planned ahead in case of an emergency.

Furthering the paranoia is the threat of chemical and biological weapons. Police Chief Brian Noonan said the police have a supply of US military-issue, surplus gas masks that one of the officers picked up a year ago. At the time, police thought they might be useful in a situation involving tear gas.

Noonan has since taken them out of storage.

Too many kids at AvalonBay?

School officials worry about financial impact

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

There will be no welcome mat from the school department for the proposed 254-unit apartment complex off Route 3A.

Although the developer, AvalonBay Communities Inc., says the luxury project with heated pool, spa, exercise facility and clubhouse is geared toward "empty-nesters" and young professionals with no kids — school officials fear it would flood the schools with more children than they can absorb. Many of those children could come from about 50 units in the complex which are being earmarked for affordable housing as part of the company's comprehensive permit requirement.

And schoolchildren in "low-income" apartments often need additional support and services, including those of a social worker and psychologist, Supt. Edward Malvey said.

"You typically find these youngsters come to school not with all the readiness skills," he said.

Avalon estimates the project would add an additional 30 schoolchildren to Cohasset. But the Virginia-based developer and the superintendent are miles apart on the numbers.

"You typically find these youngsters come to school not with all the readiness skills."
— Edward Malvey, superintendent of schools

"A conservative estimate would give us 268 new students in one fell swoop," said Malvey, saying that would equate to 10 additional classrooms. Malvey said his guess was based on the total number and size of the apartments.

AvalonBay is proposing building 23, two-to-three story wood-frame buildings with one-, two- and three-bedroom units at the former 62-acre

Housing authority

Margaret R. Charles of Linden Drive is interested in filing a vacancy on the Cohasset Housing Authority.

In a letter to selectmen, Charles says she has become aware of the complex issues facing the elderly through her visits to residents at 60 Elm St., a housing project for senior citizens.

Charles, who has lived in town since 1958, is on the Council on Elder Affairs and the Senior Housing Committee.

Resurfacing sought

In a letter to selectmen penned by Mary Hardwell, 54 Rust Way, and signed by five of her neighbors, the residents asked that Rust Way be considered for resurfacing.

A special gift for New York City's fire chief

Local man paints elaborate helmet shields

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

When the World Trade Center towers burst into flames on Sept. 11, hundreds of firefighters were dispatched to the scene. Then with little concern for their own safety, the firefighters ran into the burning skyscrapers and up the stairwells, while thousands of people were running the other way.

Upwards of 340 New York City firefighters gave their lives and another 186 were injured that morning in a valiant effort to rescue others. Estimates are they may have saved 25,000 people from certain death.

Bob Stella wasn't surprised at their bravery because he's witnessed firefighters' heroic acts time and time again. Armed with a camera, the Weymouth resident has covered innumerable fire scenes in the past 20 years on a part-time, freelance basis for local newspapers. Over the years, he's also become friends with many in the various fire departments.

"I hang around with them and go fishing with them," Stella says about local firefighters. "Then you see them run into a burning house and you get a lot of respect for someone who can do that."

So like so many others, Stella wanted to do something to help in the aftermath of the terrorist attack.

"I could have written a check, but I wanted to do something different," he says.

Stella, a 1979 Braintree High School graduate who works as a custodian at the Plymouth River School in Hingham, is also an artist — a "hidden" talent, he discovered by accident a decade ago.

As a hobby, Stella paints helmet shields, a painstaking labor-of-love that captures the individual firefighter's town or department and often, his or her personality.

Stella's most recent creation is a shield for Daniel Nigro, the new chief of the New York City Fire Department, who was at the scene but survived the collapse of the towers. Peter J. Ganci, Jr., the former chief, perished that morning in the line of duty.

The 24-karat, gold-leaf shield features a Dalmatian, looking sad, in front of the two World Trade Center towers burning in the background. The words Chief and FDNY are in black letters with red background. The sad Dalmatian is a traditional firefighter symbol, that has its roots in an editorial cartoon following a fatal fire in Detroit some time ago, Stella explains.

Stella, who is on the Board of Directors of Hingham's Bare Cove Fire Museum, is also a student of the history of the fire service. About 10 years ago, Stella was painting some detailing on one of the museum's antique engines when Hingham's Deputy Chief Mark Duff asked him if he would paint his helmet shield.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln's helmet shield, painted by Bob Stella, shows the symbol of a fire chief, five crossed trumpets.

Helmet shields are made of several layers of leather and bolted onto the front of a helmet.

Duff liked the results and soon the word spread.

"He showed it to an officer in Abington, who got one and he showed it to a firefighter in Duxbury, who bought one, and it took off from there," says Stella, who has painted shields for firefighters in Braintree, Holbrook, Weymouth, Abington, Rockland, Marshfield, Norwell, Hanover, Cohasset and Scituate — to name a few. And through his Web site, firefighters from as far away as California and several foreign countries have contacted Stella for his services. Stella, who is among only a handful of helmet-shield painters in the country, says most firefighters purchase their shield, which is already painted, from the factory. But those lack the unique detail, he says.

Nothing new

Elaborate helmet shields and even, fancy fire engines are nothing new. Stella explains in years gone by, engine companies competed with one another by elaborately painting their fire trucks. It was a way of showing pride in their work, he says.

Some even had landscapes or panoramic scenes in gold leaf. "It proved to be too costly for the town to do it," Stella says. But as early as 1900, the firefighter's helmet shield could be really ornate.

Firefighters either provide Stella with a photo or send him a fax indicating what they want on the shield and he takes it from there. The possibilities are endless. Some feature cartoon characters, others have "trumpets" which officers used as megaphones in the days before radios to call orders to the front lines, and still others have town seals. One firefighter, who works in farming on the side, wanted a John Deere tractor on his shield. Another features Santa Claus, because the firefighter played Santa every year for the department at Christmas. Stella charges $95 for a chief's shield, which has golf leaf, and $70 for other shields.

Bob Stella, a Weymouth resident, is hard at work painting a new helmet shield in his workshop. Firefighters usually design their own shields but Stella has created a special one for the New York City chief. The shield shown at right, features a sad Dalmatian, a symbol indicating a tragic fire, standing in front of the burning World Trade Center towers.

Stella, who also paints firehouse signs, says the shields hold up under some of the toughest conditions.

It's through his contacts in New York City that the helmet shield will be hand delivered to the new chief.

Stella was on the telephone Sept. 11 with a firefighter from Norwood when they both watched the events unfold on TV.

"The first tower was on fire — it was a 'big job', a five-alarm fire," Stella recalls the conversation. "Then the second tower was hit and we both said, 'this was no accident.'"

While bravery is obvious, Stella says the generosity of spirit and camaraderie are part of the fire service that many never see.

"They invite me back to the firehouse to have supper with them," he says about his spot news photography. "I throw them a few pictures and they love you for it.

"If you eat a firehouse supper, you never go home hungry." Stella's photos have also helped fire departments determine how certain fires got started and where.

Stella hopes in the aftermath of the tragedy, more people will support their local fire department, which is often at the victim of cuts at budget time.

"It's not unusual for the old police cruisers to be handed down as fire cars," says Stella, pointing out that many departments have to raise money privately for life-saving devices, such as thermal imaging cameras. And then there's the manpower issue.

"When three guys pull up to a house fire, there's a lot to do," Stella says. "I recall at a house fire in Weymouth — the guys were inside the house trying to pull the hose which was 'kinked' outside.

"I put my camera down to help. There was no one else there to help them."

Boy Scout Troop 28 turns 85 years young!

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEHLBRINK

AUTUMN SPLENDOR

Hello Cohasset. October is a great month and we have had a beautiful first week in terms of weather. It was a little on the chilly side at the beginning of the week but this warm up that we are having now is just perfect! The leaves are so pretty to look at with all the changing colors. The other day, I found myself lost in thought about all that is going on with the country and drove around in circles. While I was doing this, I stopped and looked up at the most gorgeous display of colors in the trees and was able to change my thoughts if only for a few minutes. As much as I wish that life could freeze for a little bit as the unknown is so scary, seeing the change in the seasons reminds us that life will continue on and so must we. Take the time to see and enjoy all that this new season is bringing, the leaves, pumpkins, scarecrows and the lead up into the holiday season.

GET WELL SOON

I received a special "Get Well" message to Mr. John Maynard of Locust Road. John suffered a serious heart attack about a month ago and his two friends, Byron and Milton are wishing him the very best and hoping for a speedy recovery. Byron and Milton met John several months back and since that time, John had been to Ninety Six, S.C. to visit with them and they in turn, were able to come here to Cohasset for a visit with John. Byron wanted us all to know how blessed he feels we are to have such a beautiful, seaside town. I have to say I agree! Get well soon, John.

ON THE MEND

Speaking of getting well, Polly Logan of Nichols Road is back home. She's busy making calls and sending our press releases for the Cohasset Consignment Shop. She is such a grand lady and we're so happy she is feeling better and getting back to her busy schedule.

TROOP 28 CELEBRATES

Boy Scout Troop 28 is celebrating its 85th Anniversary (1916-2001) on Sunday, Oct. 21 from 3-5 p.m. at Kimball's By The Sea. This event is a way for the more than 1000 past and present residents of Cohasset who have contributed to and benefited from their associations with scouting, to join together for an afternoon of reminiscences, acknowledgements and renewed camaraderie. A reception will be held from 1-2, followed by a Chicken Dinner and a Scouting past, present and future program from 3:30-5 p.m. If you feel that you should have an invitation or know someone who should, please contact Merle Brown at 781-383-1625 or email him at Mbrown02635@mediaone.net.

COLLEGE SOCCER

Jackie Kahn, who graduated from Cohasset High School in 2000, was named to the Centennial Conference women's soccer honor roll last week. Jackie, a two-sport sophomore standout for Swarthmore College, scored the game-winning goal in Swarthmore's 1-0 upset of Washington College. It was Jackie's second goal of the season and the first game-winning goal of her career. Jackie, who was co-captain of the Skippers' Varsity girls' lacrosse team for two years, also had a fine rookie season last spring for Swarthmore in that sport, scoring 12 goals and 3 assists for the 10-5 Garnet Pride squad. Fantastic news about a very talented young lady!

HOCKEY BOOSTERS

Hooray, it is time to get ready for the Hockey Boosters Second Annual Holiday Calendar Raffle. The Cohasset Hockey Boosters have completed the calendar for this fun and exciting fundraiser with even bigger and better prizes than last year! Every day during the month of December a ticket will be drawn for that days winning prize. Each ticket has 31 chances to win! Local businesses have been very generous this year with donations of money, goods and services. Each day's prize is valued between $25 and $200. On Sunday, Nov. 4 between 12 noon and 5 p.m., members of the Cohasset Varsity Hockey Team and JV Hockey Team will sell the tickets for $5 each to family and friends. They will also distribute calendars showing all of the prizes to be awarded. Remember, any day in December could be your lucky day!

All proceeds go directly to provide Cohasset Hockey. The players, Coaches and Hockey Boosters appreciate your support.

PIZZA FUN-RAISER

On another fundraising note, the current fifth-grade class is starting the wonderful and delicious Little Caesar's Pizza Sales to help in their money raising efforts for Camp Bournedale next year. Make sure to watch for a fifth-grade student and order some of the delicious kits that are available. This sale begins on Friday, Oct. 12 and will run for a week. Why?

Tragedy has hit the nation.
Causing pain and devastation.
Nothing can rid us of the anguish we feel.
It's too hard for the world to accept this is real.

The question that everyone is asking now.
Is why they did it, who and how?
Families and friends will feel the pain.
Of the love they've lost and can never regain.

As I close my eyes I think of the day.
America's dreams were washed away.
The hopes of millions began to fade.
As they watched the destruction of what they had made.

It will never be the same or so it seems.
Our prayers are with you, our hopes and dreams.
Time heals all, or so they say,
but this is a memory that will forever stay.

Hour by hour, day by day.
Things will get better, we'll find a way.
United as one, together we'll be.
A force to overcome these bad times, this tragedy.
Hand in hand we'll show no fear.
Such evil is not wanted here.
Shoulder to shoulder we'll help you through.
Rebuild a world that's honest and true.

From this cruel life their souls depart.
There'll always be a place for them in our heart.
All the screams we hear, all the tears that we cry,
All our memories of you shall cease to die.

To all those families who have lost and now grieve,
Your pain though we try, we can never perceive.
Don't give up hope, and never lose face,
Your loved ones lie in a peaceful place.
In a world of happiness, harmony and freedom.
God cradles their souls in his golden kingdom.
Remember their smiles,
remember their laughter,
Love them dearly, now and here after.

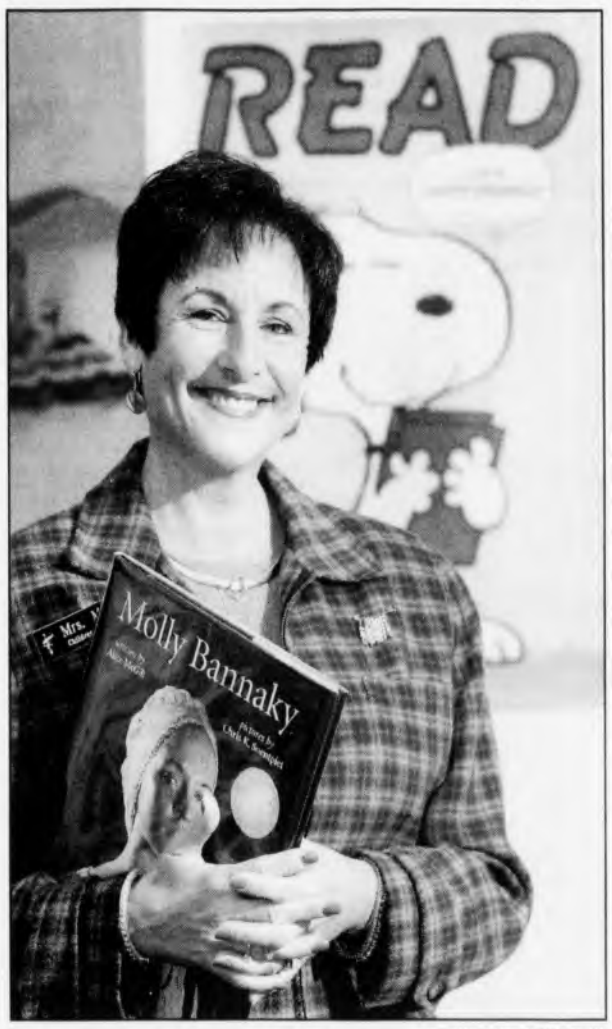
New children's librarian loves her job

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM



There's a new face a the children's library desk in the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, one that many may remember her from 15 years ago.

Sharon Moody of Cohasset is excited about the opportunity to work in the library. "There's a lot happening with the library. It's a great fit for me." Having taught kindergarten at the Joseph Osgood School for 15 years Moody is quite comfortable with her surroundings.

Moody received a bachelor's in science in Education from Eastern Nazarene College and a master's in childhood development from Suffolk. She is looking forward to the challenge of working in a public library setting. "I'm really committed to literature and literacy for all children. It was my favorite part of the day while I was teaching so I was naturally drawn to the job."

"I'm really committed to literature and literacy for all children"

— Sharon Moody, Children's librarian

Sharon Moody is the new children's librarian at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

An avid reader herself, Moody has always aimed to bring the joy of reading to all of her students. Her extensive knowledge and experience as a reading teacher and a special needs teacher will be invaluable in her new assignment at the library. Her love of children's literature is contagious.

Moody has been a volunteer at the library's circulation desk and is enjoying her full-time position in the children's room.

Moody replaces Susanne Terry who left after more than 15 years at the library. Terry is working for the Boston Atheneum, a private library, and helping put their children's collection together.

Patience Towle is the chairwoman of the library trustees and believes Moody is a great fit. Towle says that the library is, "very enthusiastic about having her aboard. She's wonderful with children and understands the community."

Moody wants all parents and kids to know that the library is a comfortable and safe place. She emphasizes that she can help children find a book to read for pleasure, or help them with a book report. She also feels that once the children realize she's working at the library they'll start coming more often. One of the library's goals is to be an exciting place that keeps people coming back. "We want people to realize what we have here," Moody said.

The library boasts three internet stations where one can sign up and surf the net. Although most children in Cohasset have internet at their house, Moody says some still filter in to research projects and email friends.

The library is quickly running out of space and Moody hopes the town approves the new library slated for the old Osgood School building. "It would be very exciting to plan and put together a children's room," Moody said. The children's room is filled to the brim with children's books and videos, as well as a large selection of books for young adults but has quickly run out of space.

Moody is the proud mother of two boys, William is a senior at Cohasset High School, and Robby is a senior at Union College in Schenectady, N.Y.

GEMS of Hope, hopes to help

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

It's fashionable to donate money to a worthy cause. On Oct. 26, GEMS of HOPE will be sponsoring a fashion show with proceeds being donated to the needy.

Mary Larson and Leah Taylor Roy, both of Cohasset, started GEMS (Global Economic Medical Self-Sufficiency) six years ago. In an effort to, "help the poorest of poor. We wanted to focus on women and children," explained Larson.

GEMS strives to teach underprivileged women to become self-sufficient. With a very small amount of money the organization can give a woman, who has nothing, an education and a business plan.. GEMS also funds medical programs, aids in the delivery of medical supplies, and helps to build schools and libraries.

Larson and Roy first opened up a partner organization in Brazil but now operate in many countries including, Colombia, Nicaragua, Romania, Haiti, the Dominican Republic, and locally they fund the Mary Martha program in Hingham and ODWIN (Opening Doors Wider in Nursing) in Dorchester. Larson has visited some of these countries after donating the money and said the changes she has seen have been overwhelming.

Larson is worried that the recent tragedy in New York has deterred people from donating to charities outside of the city. She believes that hunger spawns anger and violence. "All over the world people are in desperate situations, if you could see these people one would realize that as long as people are hungry there will be violence," she says. Larson is worried that unless, "we all think on an international plane who knows what is going to happen? Today it's Afghanistan, tomorrow it may be Haiti unless something is done."

However, because of the Sep. 11 disaster, Larson has decided that the fashion show will benefit at least two New York tragedies, the Family for Freedom Fund, which helps to give scholarships to those who lost their parents, and the Fireman's Association, which donates money to the firefighters' families.

She feels, "the greatest weapon to combat terrorism is to reach out to these people and give them hope and life." Larson believes that the proceeds from the Oct. 26 could help up to 1,000 people.

"It's not about the fashion show, but about starving women," Larson said. The show will be the largest fund-raiser in the organization's history.

The show is going to be held at Atlantica Restaurant and is being run by Neiman-Marcus which marks the first time the department store has participated in such an event. Henry Dunay a renowned jeweler, and Jeffrey Sebora, a prominent furrier will be at the show leading a silent auction.

The night entails an open bar from 6:30 to 7:30pm followed by the fashion show and dinner. Dancing and the silent auction will follow. Call 781-383-2165 for information on how to get tickets. They are priced at $125 and are tax-deductible.

Since the shop is staffed entirely by volunteers, Merrill encourages men and women to register for three hour shifts as it is rewarding, and helps countless worthy programs sponsored by the social service league that serves the towns of Scituate, Hull, Norwell, Hingham and Cohasset. For information, call 781-383-0687.

SOS for volunteers

Since its beginning in 1912, the Social Service League's Cohasset Consignment Shop has relied on volunteers. Manager Andy Merrill is sending out an SOS to all retirees — men and women — along with newcomers in the towns which benefit from the services of the Social Service League mainly, Hingham, Scituate, Hull, Norwell and Cohasset.

All that are interested should call 383-0687. Proceeds from the shop benefit the flu shots, meals on wheels, battered women, keep well programs to mention only a few.

OPINION

Stereotypes

We certainly understand the school department's fears of overcrowding by an influx of new students from the 254-unit apartment complex being proposed off Route 3A.

The town is in the throes of expanding and rehabilitating two schools to the tune of $40 million and just built a brand-new $10 million school three years ago — so throngs of unexpected youngsters flooding the system is a legitimate concern.

But what is disconcerting is the school superintendent's and school committee's reaction to the prospect of the "affordable housing" mix in the proposed AvalonBay development.

For a moment, we had to remind ourselves we were covering a Cohasset School Committee meeting and weren't eavesdropping in on a discussion about government housing, dubbed "the projects," in the inner city. We take exception to the assumptions at a recent meeting that children in low-income and moderate-income families will require additional services, such as special education or a school psychologist. It is quite a leap to take and we wonder what the superintendent and others base their information on.

Even the wealthiest of families have their share of educational and psychological needs which must be met by school officials. It is disconcerting to hear school officials try to paint "low-income" students with such a broad brush.

Yes, AvalonBay is proposing that 20 percent of the units – about 50 – would be affordable for a family making 50 percent of the median income of the Greater Boston area. But that translates into about $33,000, which is without a doubt very low by Cohasset standards, but just might open up housing opportunities for young families whose bread-winners are new schoolteachers, firefighters or police officers.

Unless a town has 10 percent affordable housing, it's vulnerable to projects like AvalonBay that can skirt local zoning laws. Of Cohasset's 2,752 housing units in town, only 76 or 2.76 percent qualify as "affordable" to low- or moderate-income persons by state standards. All 76 are in the complex on Elm Street behind the police/fire station.

The statistics don't mean the town lacks people who could benefit from more affordably priced housing. Many here in town could not afford to buy the houses they live in, at today's prices. And still others, especially senior citizens, are being forced out of town because the property values have driven their taxes up.

Unfortunately, the superintendent and school committee — save Chartis Langmaid who tried to put the matter into perspective — gave credence last week to the stereotype that Cohasset is only for the rich.

The state recognizes that towns like ours aren't doing their fair share to create affordable housing so it created the so-called "Anti-snob Zoning Act" and, now we have AvalonBay knocking at our door.

Ironically, if AvalonBay goes through all its 254 units would count toward the town's 10 percent threshold of low- to moderate-income housing even though only 50 units would actually be affordable. The state counts both subsidized and market-rate units in eligible, subsidized rental projects.

That means AvalonBay would put us over the 10 percent benchmark — and Cohasset schools wouldn't have to worry about any more low-income families with kids.

Better use for grant money

TO THE EDITOR:

David C. Soule, Executive Director
Metropolitan Area Planning Council
60 Temple Place Boston, MA 02111

Dear Mr. Soule:

The $169,000 Transportation Enhancement Grant from the MassHighway Dept for the Town of Cohasset is still very much opposed by town businessmen and by a large number of town residents. This opposition exists whether it is the center or the harbor area of Cohasset being affected. We, as concerned residents hardly think it is necessary to 'fix' the flow pattern or the infrastructure, nor do we feel we need streetscape improvements.

We duly understand that this grant has already been awarded, but sincerely feel that this money should and could be put to much better, more effective, more needed, compelling, constructive use. Our question to you then is: How do we, as a community with genuine concerns, turn this money back to TIP, MA Highway Department, MAPC, or MPO — whomever it is we need to communicate with or funnel this money to laudable projects? How can we even talk about sidewalks and streetscapes, when lower Manhattan has no sidewalks, and certainly no fitting streetscapes? How can we even think of using this grant for such frivolous projects when there are many more compassionate and valid endeavors that need our attention and ultimately benefit a far greater number of citizens?

Plumbing code

TO THE EDITOR

In response to your recent article detailing the " brewing feud between the Cohasset Historical Society and the Sewer Commission " let me quote from the Massachusetts State Plumbing Code 248 CMR 2.02 Basic Principles [1]

All Premises intended for human habitation, occupancy, or use must be provided with a supply of potable water... 248 CMR 2.10 [19] [a] [1] Application of Changes: the requirements set forth in 248 CMR 2.10 [19] and Table 1: Minimum Facilities for Building Occupancy Other Than Residential shall apply only to plumbing system installation, alteration or extension projects in which the process of designing the plumbing work to be performed begins on or after the date on which these new requirements are published as final in the Massachusetts Register [June 3, 1994]

As you can see the Plumbing Code does require potable water but does not require that it be connected to any plumbing fixture

Might I suggest the Historical Society petition the Board of State Examiners of Plumbers and Gas Fitters through the Board of Health for a variance as provided in 248 CMR 2.01 [5]

COHASSET CARES

'Mr. Cohasset' is quite a guy

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

During this challenging period of family pressures, substance abuse, and other difficulties, it is appropriate to recognize Scouts/Explorers who have dedicated themselves to God, our Country, and our Community as reflected in the Scout slogan "Do a Good Turn Daily."

So reads the Troop 28 Memorial Scholarship Fund flier for the Oct. 21 dinner. We may substitute the name "Arthur L. Lehr Jr." for "Scouts/Explorers" above.

Imagine if you will — and if you can — America without any recycling. Specifically think of Cohasset without the RTF, or without the Boy Scouts. One quiet, utterly unassuming, but idealistic person has been the prime mover behind these activities, and that's Arthur Lehr, who recently stepped down as chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee, an organization he started years ago. Back in the days when Cohasset just had a dump. Arthur cared enough to do something better. In 1999 Arthur received recognition as the outstanding recycler in the state. But at home here Arthur embodies the phrase "Cohasset cares."

Arthur attributes both his love of nature and his concern for people to his grandfatherly mentor the Rev. Fred Stanley, a fellow Mainer [though born in Maine, Arthur came to live here in Cohasset near Wheelwright Park at the age of five]. Like some other fortunate ones, Arthur had access to his relatives' Maine farm as well as The Oaks Farm on Sohier Street. The Rev. Stanley impressed on Arthur "the need to respect the rights and feelings of others."

Arthur saw every island in the Pacific and much of the rest of the world during his four and a half year World War II service in the Navy. He found himself with others ready to invade Japan when the war ended.

It was easy for Arthur to see that "our environment was a utopia; we have so much," he says. To help preserve and protect, it was "second nature" for Arthur to put in 30 years as a safety engineer ensuring safe working conditions - and to get into Scouting, which he continues proudly, where the motto 'Be prepared' fits his other volunteer work as Cohasset's Emergency Management [formerly Civil Defense] chief.

Arthur's words to us in these regards, in addition to being prepared, are for us to "take reasonable precautions without being hysterical. Stay home with our supplies. Use your hurricane checklist. The high school is for emergency use only."

Timely advice from the Master of Ceremonies at the 85th anniversary of Cohasset's Troop 28 on Oct. 21, is that "there are no quick solutions to our problems. Use common sense. Think about what we have and be ready to take care of our natural resources. By and large people are considerate. Keep a positive feeling. Don't let discouragement get you down. If you help others, life is fun."

Amen. Thank you, Arthur. You're quite a guy.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

How to display Old Glory

• On a vehicle – Attach the flag to the antenna or clamp the flagstaff to the right fender. Do not lay the flag over the vehicle.

• On a building – Hang the flag on a staff or on a rope over the sidewalk with the stars away from the building.

• Over the street – Hang the flag with the stars to the east on a north- south street or north on an east-west street.

• Above other flags – Hang the flag above any other flag on the same pole

• Other flags, separate poles – Hang all flags on equal poles. Hang the U.S. flag on its own right, hoist it first and lower it last.

• In a window – Hang the flag vertically with the stars to the left of anyone looking at it from the street.

• Half-mast – This is a sign of mourning. Raise the flag to the top of the pole then lower it to the half way point. Before lowering the flag, raise it to the top again at the end of the day.

• Upside down – An upside-down flag is considered a distress signal.

• Multiple staffs – If you display the flag on a staff with other flags around it, place the flag at the center and highest point. Crossed staffs - Keep the flagstaff higher and on its own right.

• In a hall or lobby – Hang the flag vertically across from the main entrance with the stars to the left of anyone coming through the door.

Recalling life on Lincoln Hillside

MY VIEW

KATHLEEN O'DONNELL

The first in a series of reflections

I grew up in the 1960s in a special old Cohasset neighborhood known as Lincoln Hillside.

Lincoln Hillside was a term used only by people of my grandparents' generation. As far as I know, it referred to a grid with Cushing Road on the bottom and the hills of Pleasant Street, Norfolk Road, Oak Street and Ash Street leading off from it, including Hill Street.

My little world comprised only a small part of it. It was, and is, a lovely area of farmhouse-style homes, with abundant flower and vegetable gardens, lawns that were mowed each week. In many homes, my generation (babies of the 1950s) represented the third and fourth generations of that family in that neighborhood, or in some cases in that house. The parents of many of the children that I played with on Lincoln Hillside grew up and played in the same yards that we played in.

The children of my generation had ancestors who didn't come to America with the Mayflower. They had great-grandparents who came to Cohasset from Italy, from Portugal, the Pico Islands, from Ireland. They came seeking better opportunities for work, for their families, for their futures. They were hard working fishermen, lobstermen, furniture makers, caretakers, gardeners. Their wives in many cases worked as nurses, in child care, as laundresses, seamstresses and cooks for other, wealthier Cohasset families. With each succeeding generation their opportunities for work and education became wider.

In my own family, our links with other people in our neighborhood of my parents' and grandparents' generation was valued. I remember many warm smiles from Mary Rooney, sitting under Tony Barrows' grape arbor, sitting in church next to Margaret Buckley, and lovely cards and gifts from Mary and Pauline Keating to celebrate all our special milestones.

We threw socks with tennis balls tied in them deep into the evening sky to attract bats.

From a distance of many years and many miles I look back on a childhood spent largely on Lincoln Hillside as a very good one. It was a safe and peaceful time for children. We played in each other's yards, rode our bikes on Short Street, we walked to the library and in the summertime our mothers (God bless them) took carloads of us to Sandy Beach for days of sunshine and sandwiches. We bought penny candy and pencils at Ruth Simeone's store. We took part in Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Little League and we went to Sunday School. We were Rooneys and Curleys, we were Fitzpatricks and Healys, we were Contes and Protulises.

This was a time when children's television was limited to a few daytime hours. In the summertime, children naturally drifted outdoors after supper to play for another few hours, to see who else might be out. We threw socks with tennis balls tied in them deep into the evening sky to attract bats. We looked for fireflies. We pulled ripe raspberries, green beans and tomatoes from our parents' and grandparents' vines to snack on.

A few parents had brass ships' bells attached outside their doors. When it was getting late, they would ring these bells to call their children home. Each one had a different tone. I can still hear those lovely bells, and feel the warmth of walking toward a well-lit house from a darkened yard on a summer evening.

As summer drew to a close we prepared for school. After a few years of waiting at the Protulis' driveway to watch all the older children march onto the yellow school bus, it was finally my turn to start school. A new school year was beginning. I had a new red dress and a yellow pencil case. The pencil case had a moving mechanism on the top which magically slid back to reveal two new pencils and a sharpener. It had been bought especially for me by my dad. It was the most beautiful and prized piece of molded plastic ever owned.

We waited in line that first morning, some relaxed, some afraid. Finally, our yellow school bus pulled up at Norfolk Road, and with a great whoosh and a metal squeak the door opened. There in the front seat, with large and gentle dark brown eyes, our driver Manuel Marks smiled and welcomed use to a new school year and a new chapter in our lives...

Kathleen O'Donnell, a CHS graduate, grew up in Cohasset and now lives and works in the UK with her family.

Rocky Top top honors

TOM HENSHAW

Well, the final results are in and the winner is — the envelope, please — the University of Tennessee.

No, it's not the vote of the Associated Press sports writers' panel ranking the Tennessee Volunteers football team, which used to be pretty good but lost to a team from an institute of higher learning in Georgia Saturday.

A hell of a game, incidentally, won with a touchdown by Georgia in the last six seconds. But I digress . . .

No, it's not a rating based on the number of Nobel Prize winners on the payroll who fiddle with test tubes in the labs and write books while their graduate students lecture their classes.

No, it's better that.

The University of Tennessee has been chosen by the Princeton Review as the nation's No 1 party school.

I'm not sure what the Review takes into account when it compiles its list of party schools but I rather suspect that beer-drinking and hard liquor consumption figures heavily in the formula.

Also the number of female students who appear au natural in Playboy's "Girls of the Southeastern Conference" issue.

The Review's research also turned up the information that the best party school in New England is the University of New Hampshire, 11th on the national list, which I am sure drew a protest from UMass-Amherst, I know, I've been there.

The Princeton Review, incidentally, is a New York publishing house that has no affiliation with the university of the same name, which, was named the No. 1 academic college in the country by the magazine U. S. News & World Report.

The Review picks a list of party schools every year and each year I follow it closely on the off chance that I may someday wind up in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, or Iowa City, Iowa.

Last year's No. 1 party school was Louisiana State University, which didn't sit very well with officials of the university in Baton Rouge. Nor did its second place finish in the 2001 rankings.

"I think the whole survey would be very laughable if it didn't misinform people about the university's environment," huffed Chancellor Mark Emmert. "LSU is no more of a party school that any other American university."

Oh, yeah! The Princeton Review also lists its choices as the "stone-cold sober" schools, headed each year by Brigham Young University, the Mormon school in Provo, Utah, where firewater is banned.

The year before that the top party school for a second time was Florida State, which so rattled the chain of FSU President Talbot D'Alemberte that he created an award of his own for the Princeton Review.

"We're going on the offensive this year with our 1999 Golden Gargoyle Award for the most manipulative, bogus research," he said.

But, alas, Florida State was still in the Top 10 two years later and promised to remain for years to come. After all, isn't it the alma mater that taught Party 101 to that old Hollywood party animal, Burt Reynolds.

HEALTH NOTES

Being prepared to combat bioterrorism

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

One bright spot in the planning against terrorism is the preparation by the National Health Service. The NHS Center for Disease Control (CDC) may not be able to predict the exact biological or chemical mechanism or location, but the agency's Bioterrorism Program is designed to help prepare for a deliberate attack so that the nation can respond quickly and reliably if an attack were to occur. The framework for this preparation lies in the work done to protect against the flu. In 1999, after an outbreak of flu believed to have the potential for a full scale pandemic (epidemic in many countries) which health authorities were able to control, the CDC began planning for a Flu pandemic. The planning extended to local health organizations and many in Cohasset participated.

The framework for this preparation lies in the work done to protect against the flu.

There was a reason to get serious about the Flu. In 1918, there was an outbreak of Flu that killed an estimated 40,000,000 people world wide. Soldiers brought it back from Europe, and almost every town in the land had flu deaths. In Cohasset, it was winter, and Lot Bates remembers that there were traveling embalmers who would go to peoples houses to embalm the dead, some going for weeks before they could be interred, because the soil was too frozen to accept the bodies. "Many were buried in home burials," according to Lot. The CDC has learned its lesson from the repeated return each year of the Flu virus; each time in a different form and level of severity. They know there will be another pandemic and are working to be prepared. Similarly, the preparation provides the basis for the war on terrorism.

In the event of a bioterrorist attack, the first line of defense will be rapid identification of the agent so that exposure can be limited and those affected can be treated. To accomplish this, CDC has developed a rapid toxicology screen that can identify many different agents in a single blood sample. Regional and state laboratories have strengthened their capacity to detect different agents and to communicate the results to CDC and others. Also, the CDC has upgraded the capacity of state and local health agencies to detect and communicate different health threats —including not only bioterrorism but also emerging infectious diseases, chronic diseases, and environmental hazards. This means that we reap the benefits of these investments every day, not just in the event of a bioterrorist attack.

Finally, to help treat victims of a bioterrorist attack, CDC has worked with pharmaceutical companies and other partners to create regional stockpiles of the drugs that would be needed quickly to treat man-made outbreaks of anthrax, plague, tularemia, or other diseases.

Locally, the CDC has developed a Health Alert Network (HAN) to organize local communities which will identify hospital overflow facilities, triage centers, medical pools, etc. all of which aid the community and provide the tools to fight bioterrorism.

For more about bioterrorism, try the web at: http://www.cdc.gov/programs/bio.htm

Flu Clinics

Annual Flu Clinics will be scheduled later in October and November. The reason for the late date is that the vaccine will not be available as early as it has in past years. However, there is still time for you to be fully protected. The flu season really begins in January and continues into April, with February and March being the months where the disease reaches its peak.

All people 65 years and older are urged to get a yearly flu shot as well as anyone with chronic illnesses such as diabetes, pulmonary conditions or cardiac disease. As soon as the vaccine is available the clinic dates will be published in our local newspapers, church bulletins, and posted in local store windows and businesses.

Note: Those wishing flu shots who are enrolled in Medicare B are requested to bring their Medicare Cards with them, since the town is authorized to bill Medicare for these shots.

Don't Get Caught Off -Guard! The best defense against pneumonia and influenza (the flu) is a combination of education and immunization. It may be difficult to avoid getting the sniffles during cold and flu season, but by knowing your risk factors and understanding the benefits of immunization, you can prevent serious complications:

- Immunization is a safe, effective way to help prevent influenza, pneumonia and many other contagious diseases. However, incorrect information regarding the vaccines can prevent people from taking this important step toward good health. Make sure your decisions are based on fact, not myth.
- Pneumococcal pneumonia is a common complication of the flu and may itself be complicated by meningitis and bacteremia (blood infection)
- The flu vaccine is 50%-60% effective in preventing hospitalization
- Some forms of pneumonia immunization are 60-70 percent effective against pneumococcal diseases

Myth: Most diseases that are vaccine-preventable have been wiped out in the United States.

Fact: It is true that vaccination has enabled us to reduce most vaccine-preventable diseases to very low levels in the United States. However, some of them are still quite prevalent — even epidemic in other parts of the world. Travelers can unknowingly bring these diseases into the United States, and if we were not protected by vaccinations these diseases could quickly spread through the populations causing epidemics here.

Myth: Vaccines may cause harmful side effects, illnesses, and even death.

Fact: Most vaccine-adverse events are minor and temporary. More serious adverse events occur rarely (on the order of one per thousands to one per millions of doses), and some are so rare that risk is extremely minimal..

Source: Centers for Disease Control & Prevention, National Immunization Program

Ask your doctor if you have any risk factors that require you to get additional immunizations

Heavy jet traffic has returned to our towns

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

My neighbor called this morning and told me he was waked by planes at 3 a.m. and 5 a.m., and the Massport noise complaint line didn't answer. One thing has not changed in the wake of Sept. 11. Starting the second week after the attacks, heavy jet traffic returned to Cohasset, Hingham and Hull. "Peak period" traffic, from before 6 a.m. and then from early evening until after 11 p.m. has been incessant over these towns almost every morning and night. FAA traffic controllers at Logan were already putting all midnight to 6 a.m. traffic over the South Shore towns, whenever physically possible, and it is back, too. The European Court of Human Rights has ruled that flights between 11 p.m. and 6 a.m. infringe a persons right to have a good night's sleep, covered by article eight of the Convention on Rights, and the South Shore deserves at least the same protection!

Where does the South Shore's jet pollution problem stand, now that Massport's operations are under national investigation and subject to review by the governor's panel? Should we "wait and see"? Will our problems go away by themselves? There is no reason to expect it. President Bush and Senator Kerry are urging us to hurry back into the air, when flying is still repeatedly demonstrated not to be "safer than ever" from Logan. Airlines said recently that they are up to more than 80 percent of pre-disaster flight volume, though the planes fly more than half empty. The pressure is on to get volume up.

A senior official in the FAA regional office told me more than a year ago that his goal is to put at least 70 percent of low arriving and departing Logan traffic to the south, rather than the west, north or east. Putting most traffic on the South Shore is justified, he said, because it could be put instead on higher density populations — though South Shore proposals to the FAA show "our" traffic could be moved without putting it on any other people! During the recent scare that a weekend attack was planned for Boston, newspapers reported that all traffic might be sent over the Massachusetts Bay — Massport's "over the water," which means "over the South Shore towns" — and South Boston. If routes are changed to separate planes from populations because the planes might be the source of terrorist acts, planes should be separated from people south of Logan, too. And our elected officials need to hear it from us.

That the South Shore will cease to look so tasty to Logan Airport after Massport is investigated and new security plans are implemented nationally is magical thinking. The Massport "over the water" chorus would have to go and all the regional and Logan-based FAA personnel, who like the South Shore for night flights and peak-hour shortcuts and dogged expansion plans and expansion boosters. One week after terrorist attacks originated at Logan, the president of the Massachusetts High Technology Council spoke to the press about the need to push on with Logan runway expansion.

More than 20 years ago, Massport agreed to a permanent injunction against runway expansion at Logan. This year Massport filed a court case to overturn the injunction. On the hotseat locally for hiring and management irregularities and with revenues down, Massport has opted to postpone its court case but not to end it. The Logan expansion proposal is "on hold" again, but for how long? 14/32 proponents might hope to postpone the expansion argument to try to get it past the taint that is on all Massport's other decision-making, but there is no evidence they have relinquished it.

The South Shore Jet Pollution Council began because the South Shore was and is getting massive jet traffic, much of it in defiance of published routing rules. Towns and citizens need to use the powerful critique of Massport's proposal already assembled to persist in vigorously pressing legal actions against the fraudulent proposal for runway expansion pointed at the South Shore and Greater Boston. They need to energetically encourage the FAA to implement true over the ocean routes that pass to the north and east of our Towns, now more than ever. Join us at:

gallons a day. McNabb said. Safe yield is the maximum capacity of the water supply — in other words, how much water can be withdrawn without depleting the supply.

"The bottom line is Cohasset would like to do it," McNabb said. "We have the capacity."

Officials from the Cohasset Water Department and Mass-American met with the state Department of Environmental Protection last month to see what permits would be needed.

According to McNabb, the engineering involved would be "a snap." Optimally, Mass-American could run up to 2,000 feet of pipe along Route 3A from the new Cohasset water tank to Hingham's water main near the Cohasset Knoll, a nursing home at the town line, and install a booster pump. Another option is connecting at the base of Forest Avenue at Jerusalem Road where there is an emergency connection to Mass-American.

"It would all be on Mass-American's nickel," he said about any expenses related to hooking up. "If we paid for it, we'd include it in our rate — so it would be cheaper for them to do it."

McNabb would not estimate how much profit Cohasset would make by selling water to Hingham but did say the revenue would be significant.

"We don't want to speculate on how much," he said. "But if it helps pay for the cost of our system then it's a good use of our supply."

The Cohasset Water Department is hiring a rate specialist who will determine how much to charge Mass-American.

> "The bottom line is Cohasset would like to do it. We have the capacity."
> — John K. McNabb, Jr., Cohasset Water Commission

"It's an intricate rate-setting issue," McNabb said. He explained the rate would include the cost of the treated water and some maintenance of the plant and distribution system. He said the composition of the water from both facilities is compatible because both supplies are chlorinated and fluoridated.

Commane of Mass-American said there has been no evaluation done on whether buying water from Cohasset would affect Mass-American's water rates, which are among the highest in the country. She said "at first blush" she did not think there would be an impact.

McNabb said the potential sale wouldn't be possible without Cohasset's second water tank, which came on line last year.

"Without two tanks, we couldn't do it," he said. "It would put too much strain on the fire flow in the system."

A potential roadblock in obtaining state approval is the fact that Mass-American has a high amount of "unaccounted for" water, as much as 20 percent. But in its favor, the company has a leak detection program and has also instituted conservation measures, such as eliminating a declining rate structure and institution of conservation-based rates.

An inter-basin transfer from the state would also be needed because Cohasset is in the South Coastal Watershed and Mass-American is in the Weir River Watershed.

"Permission is needed to transfer water across basins," McNabb said.

Also, Cohasset's water department is prohibited from the long-term sale of water through a special legislation. At the March 2002 annual Town Meeting, the Water Commission will ask voters to approve amending the law that governs the commission so it can sell water on a long-term basis, McNabb said.

Commane said Mass-American — whose local customers use 3.51 million gallons per day on average — has enough water for its current needs. She explained the company is maintaining the status quo and that every gallon currently proposed for a new development must be offset through reductions elsewhere in the system.

"New development won't change our current delivery of water," she said.

But Mass-American is concerned it won't be able to obtain a permit from the state to withdraw additional water given a recent draft report from GZA of Norwell, an environmental consulting firm, on the 23.4 square mile Weir River Watershed. Mass-American accounts for 85 percent of the Weir River withdrawals.

Back in 1998, Mass-American withdrew more than its "withdrawal limit," which was derived by water use patterns from the early 1980s, and set by the state Water Management Program in 1986.

Hingham's Water Resources Task Force listed exploration of new water sources as one of its recommendations to save the Weir River Watershed, which the task force says is over-taxed, along with conservation measures, education, and development of a watershed management plan.

Focus is on affordable housing

THE HEDLUND REPORT

SEN. ROBERT HEDLUND

Late last month the Senate passed its version of an "omnibus" housing bill dealing with a number of issues affecting affordable housing. The legislation consisted of two bills. Senate 2110 makes changes to affordable housing policy in the state.

Senate 2109, known as the "Housing Bond Bill," is a $508 million bond bill that will provide funding for the production and preservation of affordable housing across the Commonwealth.

HOUSING POLICY BILL

Senate 2110, the policy bill, included many legislative changes to the Chapter 40B affordable housing laws of the Commonwealth. Under the Senate proposal mental health and mental retardation group homes would be counted toward a community's Chapter 40B count. Also, the Senate adopted a "cooling-off" period provision which will require developers to wait 12 months after a recent denial for a permit application for a similar project before filing for a comprehensive permit. The Senate proposal will also allow local zoning boards to deny 40B applications for projects proposing an unreasonably large number of housing units in any one year, which will be determined by the size of the community.

The Senate proposal also includes a provision not included in the House version establishing a 40B incentive program in which DHCD will award cities and towns $4,568 for each affordable unit that is developed in that community.

Two other provisions are unique to the Senate proposal. One would allow cities and towns to adopt so-called "inclusionary zoning" bylaws, which would allow the communities to require any project with ten or more units to include up to 10 percent affordable units. Secondly, the Senate proposal includes a provision that streamlines state laws regarding state-foreclosed tax delinquent properties. Under this provision these properties, which have been taken by the state due to failure to pay property taxes, will be returned to productive use as affordable housing quicker by allowing municipalities to enter into agreements with developers to abate up to 75 percent of the outstanding property tax obligations and up to 100 percent of the outstanding interest and penalties, thus encouraging their development.

HOUSING BOND BILL

The $508 million Housing Bond Bill contains a $350 million appropriation for public housing modernization and renovation. This appropriation will allow local housing authorities to make much-needed repairs and improvements to public housing units. The bill also contains a $35 million appropriation for the Housing Innovations Fund, a state fund that supports development of affordable housing for homeless families in transition, as well as homeless individuals, domestic violence victims and AIDS victims. This appropriation will be used to provide grants to non-profit organizations to develop innovative forms of housing development for these individuals and families. Examples of innovative housing include single room occupancy units, employer-assisted housing, transitional housing for homeless families and battered women's shelters.

In addition, there is a $50 million appropriation for the Housing Stabilization and Investment Program, a state program designed to revitalize and improve broken down, abandoned property to be used as affordable housing development sites. This funding will also be used to provide grants to non-profit or for-profit developers to acquire and renovate abandoned buildings to be developed as affordable housing. Any unit built with grants from this program would have to remain affordable for at least 40 years.

Senate 2109 also includes a $35 million appropriation for the Capital Improvement and Preservation Fund, which will be used to help address the issue of so-called "expiring use" properties. "Expiring use" properties are developments that have been built with public subsidies and publicly assisted mortgages that are at risk of prepayment of mortgage or that are nearing the expiration of federal project-based rental assistance. This $35 million appropriation is an attempt to maintain the affordability of some of these units and keep them from going to market rate.

Two distinct appropriations are provided to spur community development as well as the production of affordable housing. First, there is a $25 million appropriation for the Community Development Action Grants Program, a state program that provides grants to municipalities to improve infrastructure on publicly owned land. Secondly, there is a $10 million appropriation to create affordable housing in so-called "Urban Center Housing Zones."

Under the provisions of the housing policy bill mentioned above, municipalities can designate urban center housing zones in which they hope to spur development of affordable housing. These urban housing zones will typically be areas in which there is a predominance of commercial land uses, a high daytime or business population, and which demonstrate a need for multi-unit residences. Additionally, it is hopeful that these housing zones will be near public transportation.

In order to spur development of affordable housing in these zones, the companion housing policy legislation authorizes cities and towns to use tax increment financing, which allows the municipalities real estate tax exemptions to developers who will develop or redevelop downtown areas for use as residential or mixed-use areas. In exchange for these real estate tax exemptions the developers will keep the units affordable for at least 20 years. The $10 million appropriation will complement these legislative changes.

While the final bill did not include all that I wished, such as an increase in the tax credit for de-leading of housing units, and included some things that I did not like, I fully supported the Bond Bill, as well as the companion housing policy legislation. Both bills will now have to go to a conference committee comprised of House and Senate appointees who will resolve differences between the House and Senate versions.

Bob Hedlund is state senator for the Plymouth-Norfolk District that includes Cohasset.

Scituate keeps promise to sue MBTA over Greenbush

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@CNC.COM

Scituate has followed through on its promise to sue the MBTA.

On Friday, Scituate selectmen filed a lawsuit against both the MBTA and state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand stating that the final environmental impact report on the Greenbush rail restoration project does not adequately and properly comply with the Massachusetts Environmental Protection Act's standards.

Selectmen first planned to file suit following Durand's approval of the FEIR in August and set an Oct. 5 deadline for the MBTA to reexamine the environmental impact of the proposed $408 million train project on Scituate. No new negotiations have taken place with the MBTA since then.

"We hope the courts will rectify what we perceived as a wrong being done to the town of Scituate," Selectman Joseph Norton said. "There would be a chance, if we prove successful, that we would get more mitigation, we would get more of what we are looking for."

Scituate selectmen stressed that the decision to sue the MBTA is not an effort to try and prevent the train from being built nor is it a delaying tactic to stall the project.

"We have reached a point on the board of selectmen where we recognize that Greenbush is coming and we have to get the best deal for the town, and use whatever means necessary to get that best deal," Norton said.

The MBTA set an Aug. 10 deadline for public comment on the FEIR. Several requests were made for a public hearing prior to the deadline, but were unanswered. State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and selectmen from Scituate, Braintree, Cohasset and Hingham, and the Weymouth Town Council all made requests for public hearings in July.

> "We hope the courts will rectify what we perceived as a wrong being done to the town of Scituate."
> — Joseph Norton, Scituate selectman

Norton said he did not expect a direct response from the MBTA over the lawsuit, instead he is anticipating they will seek a summary judgement and get the case dismissed.

Braintree also filed suit against the MBTA in an effort to resolve the issues concerning how trains will run through Weymouth Landing.

While Braintree is concerned about passing trains, Scituate is concerned about where they end up. Durand has asked that the Scituate layover station be north of the Driftway rather than to the south of it, as originally planned. While less environmentally damaging the north of Driftway plan would have a negative impact on Greenbush businesses.

These suits join three separate suits filed by the anti-train group AFTA, which most recently plans to sue over the abandoned Cohasset rail bed. AFTA attorneys say Cohasset cannot transfer the right of way because it is conservation land and any transfer would require a two-thirds vote of both houses of the state legislature.

Unemployment insurance rates won't change

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, announced Massachusetts House of Representatives approved legislation freezing the current unemployment insurance rate schedule at its current rate, Schedule "B". This legislation will help maintain the stability of the Unemployment Insurance Trust Fund, and prevent further financial burden on Massachusetts business currently struggling in the slowing of the economy.

"It is critical that we act now to help business remain viable through these difficult times," said Bradley.

Also approved was an amendment, which sets aside the one-week waiting period for collecting unemployment insurance benefits.

For nine of the last ten years, the Legislature has set the rate below the rates required by the decades old rate setting statute. Under state law the present unemployment rate, 3.9 percent, would trigger a change in the amount businesses are required to pay into the Unemployment Insurance Trust Fund. Currently operating under Schedule "B" the shift to Schedule "C" would cost employers an extra $40 a year. Over the past ten years of economic growth the Fund has grown to almost $2 billion. This is enough to cover 17 months of Unemployment Insurance costs at projected rates.

The Commerce and Labor Committee has received support for this legislation from both Associated Industries of Massachusetts and the Massachusetts AFL/CIO.

standing eight feet tall, will be at the center of the memorial. Extending 50 feet on either end of the large stone will be 22 individual stones listing the mother's name, the son's name, and the war in which they perished. A path that is flanked by pillars that gradually fade in color, will lead up to the memorial. The monument was designed so it will never be obstructed by grave stones. Pratt emphasized that no town can ever do enough to honor its veterans.

Pratt expects the dedication, which is schedule for 1 p.m. on Veterans Day, Sunday, Nov. 11 to be very dramatic. There will be a parade leading to the memorial with the Color Guard, Cosmo Legion Band, dedication speakers, and family members all expected to take part in the ceremony.

Town Meeting approved the cemetery expansion project in April, ending a 24-year battle over where to build more cemetery space in town. The expansion was necessary because the Woodside Cemetery had been sold out of plots for 10 years. The expansion has allowed for double-depth plots which will double the amount of people that will be able to be buried there. The expansion has created space for 814 casket burials and 1,000 urns. Interestingly, according to Pratt, Cohasset averages 20 percent more cremations the rest of Massachusetts.

Pratt estimates that the Cemetery will need to sell 50 to 60 plots a year to repay the loan of $700,000. The cheapest plot available to purchase is $1,300.

Because the revenue generated from plot sales will repay the loan, construction will have no impact on the town tax base. After the loan is paid off, the town could earn up to $2 million in perpetual care fund.

Town is ready for emergencies

to the scene," Noonan said.

In other steps taken, police Sgt. Robert Jackson and Det. Gregory Lennon have received training in incident command and terrorism by the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency.

Jackson said in light of current world affairs, all officers have been asked to pay particular attention to any suspicious activity around any of the town's infrastructure or facilities. They will also be on alert where large groups of citizens gather.

"Any suspicious activity will be thoroughly investigated and documented and put into our date base," Jackson said.

He also said police will take a hard line on parking violations in fire lanes because it is a security issue.

Police have also handed out copies of training books on combating terrorism issued by MEMA. Two officers are trained in the use of the gas masks and will train the other officers, Jackson said.

School Superintendent Ted Malvey said the schools are well prepared should anything happen. Parents would be notified through the long-standing phone chain and the bus service would continue to take their children home. Malvey also said the high school, which would be used as a shelter in case of an emergency, is equipped with generators and provisions.

The threat of chemical warfare hangs over the head of every American. Along with American flags, gas masks are sold out around the country. The recent cases of Anthrax in Florida (the first reported cases in the US since 1976) have many worried that an attack could come in the form of a biological or chemical contaminant.

With that in mind, many communities have been focusing on shoring up security around water supplies. But John McNabb, the town's water commission chairman, said it is unlikely Cohasset's system would be threatened.

Since Sept. 11 he has been reviewing and upgrading the equipment for the water storage plant. McNabb said the first step is to restrict access and have better security.

The plant is in the process of installing an upgraded alarm system and is keeping the doors locked at all times. McNabb emphasizes that the possibility of any contamination is very low. "There are very few biological and chemical threats. The process of chlorination and filtration eliminates 99.9 percent of dangerous toxins."

Addressing the issue of whether Lily Pond or the reservoir could become contaminated, McNabb says thousands of pounds of toxins would be required to infect a body of water that large. He said that there are daily drives by the reservoir looking for suspicious activity.

Town manager Mark Haddad said he has talked with various agencies and feels there's no immediate danger. "The town of Cohasset is prepared for any emergency," Haddad said.

Too many kids at AvalonBay?

Webb-Norfolk, site, a large tract of industrial land, across from Atlantic Bagel. Avalon will seek a comprehensive permit for the $43 million project under the state's "Anti-snob Zoning Act" that renders many of the town's zoning regulations inapplicable in exchange for setting aside 20 percent of the units for affordable housing.

Avalon says rents will range from $1,200-$2,000 for the market-rate units and $700-$1,000 for the 50 or so affordable ones, which would look the same as the other units and be dispersed throughout the complex.

Malvey told the school committee last week, the project could end up costing the schools $400,000 [for 10 additional teachers]; up to $250,000 [for additional transportation], and $100,000 [for more special needs services].

"That brings the total up to $750,000 in a flash if it happens that way," he said. Even if the project were phased in the schools aren't equipped for that kind of growth.

"We'd have to house them somehow," he said. Malvey said he passed his concerns on to the town planner, Liz Harrington, who is studying the potential impact of the project.

School committee member Mark DeGiacomo, who served on the Zoning Board of Appeals for 14 years, said the project still has a long way to go in the process. But he conceded the state statute governing comprehensive permits is "pretty strong stuff" for towns under a certain threshold. The statute — Mass. General Laws Chapter 40B — sets a 10 percent goal of affordable housing for each community. Cohasset only has about 3 percent or about 76 units of affordable housing in town.

"They can pretty much bulldoze past local regulations," he said.

School committee member Chartis Langmaid said she didn't think children in the affordable units would necessarily require special services because they would come from local families. The moderately priced apartments would typically be filled by families who currently live in town or nearby, or by their children; and there could be local preference for the affordable units. It would not be the same as inner city apartments that might house kids in need of more special services, she said.

But member Pat Martin, a social worker, said the need for affordable housing is so great that a single mother from out of town with two children wouldn't hesitate to rent a one-bedroom unit.

Malvey said the project could deliver a "one-two punch" to Cohasset, which is in the throes of expanding and renovating two of its three schools based on a steady rate of growth.

School board chairman Stephanie Noble acknowledged the need for low-income housing but she was concerned about the scale of the Avalon proposal.

"If they could do in on a scale that's not so huge, we wouldn't be inundated like that," she said.

Member Rick Flynn said the town needed to recognize the budgetary impact of the proposal.

"This is not just a school issue," he said.

High school French connection cancelled

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A handful of French students won't be coming to Cohasset and Scituate this month as was planned. And it's unlikely their high school counterparts will fly to France this spring for the annual exchange program.

At a meeting in Scituate last week, parents discussed security precautions surrounding sending 18 Scituate and Cohasset high school students to Normandy in April.

Pat Jacquart, foreign language director in Scituate, stopped short of canceling the second part of the exchange.

"Safety is a main concern," she said.

The French trip isn't the only field trip impacted by world events. A planned 10th-grade field trip to the Caribbean for science students has been cancelled, principal Michael Jones told the school committee last week. The annual biology trip to Belize over April vacation could be in jeopardy.

In fact Jones and Supt. Edward Malvey suggested the school committee prohibit any field trips requiring air travel because the safety of the students couldn't be guaranteed due to the potential of terrorism.

"Part of me says this is exactly what the terrorists want — for us to curtail our normal activities."

—School committee member Mark DeGiacomo

The school committee, however, opted to review the field trips on a case-by-case basis rather than issue a blanket denial.

"This is a tough one," member Mark DeGiacomo said. "Part of me says this is exactly what the terrorists want — for us to curtail our normal activities.

"Are we sending the wrong message to kids and parents that they should be afraid?"

Last week's meeting took place several days before the United States and Great Britain started air attacks on terrorist strongholds in Afghanistan.

Several members said last week a lot might happen in the weeks and months ahead.

"We'd love to say 'let's just go forward and not let this stop us,'" chairwoman Stephanie Noble said. "But a lot might happen in the next few months."

The board suggested teachers planning field trips involving air travel to come before them early in the process before any deposits are made.

The school committee did approve an eighth-grade middle school French trip to Quebec slated for May and a high school science daytrip to Northeastern University's Marine Science Center in Nahant this week.

In the meantime, Scituate's language department head Jacquart is busy canceling the many excursions planned for the visiting French students who were due to arrive next week. Those activities included a trip to New York City and local trips to Salem and Plymouth.

Scituate Mariner reporter Michael Marotta also contributed to this report.

Weir River race

The Head of the Weir Race will take place Saturday, Oct. 20, at 11:30 a.m. The entry fee is $15, registration is required. The race will start from the West Corner Hingham-Hull line, to Windmill Point Boathouse, Hull, at Hull Gut.

One of the Hull Lifesaving Museum's most beloved events, the Head of the Weir, is a celebration of open-water rowing and both the beautiful Weir River Estuary and Boston Harbor in autumn.

The boats in Head of the Weir River Race jockey for position as they race out of the estuary and into the open water from West Corner (on the Hingham/Hull/Cohasset line), past Bumpkin Island, across Hingham Bay, to the museum's Windmill Point Boathouse.

A highly contested 51/2-miler, the Weir draws coxed youth and adult crews, single and double scullers, curraghs, and Alden ocean shells. It is an exceptionally exciting race and a great spectator event, featuring, typically, more than 30 boats and 150 of the region's finest rowers, including youth and adult crews from Boston Harbor, Maine, Vermont and New York.

Best views are from the bridge on George Washington Boulevard (5-to-15 minutes after the start), at the tip of Hull's Sunset Point, or at the boathouse finish line. Spectators should show great care crossing the road on George Washington Boulevard, watching for fast moving traffic.

Registration will begin at 9:30 a.m. behind the Hull Public Works building at the Hull town line on Route 228. For more information call Ed McCabe, maritime program director, at the Hull Lifesaving Museum, 781-925-5433.

Special exhibit open to all artists

The South Shore Art Center will present a national juried exhibition entitled Planes, Trains and Automobiles in the Bancroft Gallery, Nov. 9, 2001 - Jan. 5.

Jeffrey Keough, director of exhibitions for Massachusetts College of Art, will jury this exhibition.

The Planes, Trains and Automobiles exhibition continues the art center's initiative of presenting two national shows each year, juried by widely-acclaimed artists and curators. Last year's national exhibitions, Works on Paper, juried by New York artist and professor Howardena Pindell, and Photography Now, juried by Frank Gohlke a leader in contemporary American photography, had entries from more than 30 states. Entries are still being accepted for this year's exhibition. The show is open to all artists and all media with the work reflecting the theme of planes, trains and automobiles. Cash awards totaling $1,200 will be distributed. Jurying will be done on the basis of 35mm slides. Up to five slides may be submitted for consideration and entry forms and slides must be received by Oct.15t. For more information call 781-383-2787 or for an entry form visit www.ssac.org.

Ask About Our Vacation Stay Program

At a time like this, with our country in confusion, so many innocent Americans needlessly killed, it is hard to think about business. As Americans, we think of the families left behind, the sons and daughters that will never see their mothers or fathers again due to this horrible act that has befallen us.

Now, like so many times in our nation's history, the American people will, I'm sure, unite and together do whatever is necessary to overcome this horrible tragedy. It seems that none of us can do enough, yet no one can do too little.

I have the utmost sympathy and compassion for the victims of this crisis and the families left behind. They are in my prayers.

Gridders take down defending champs

Skippers prove they're for real with 14-8 win over Carver

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High's football Skippers continued their perfect season last Friday, taking down the reigning South Shore League champions, Carver, 14-8.

Cohasset's defeat of Carver is the first in the 10 meetings they have had since the Crusaders entered the SSL in 1991. Fourth year coach Tony Rolfe had called this their first real test of the season.

"I'll stand by that," reported Rolfe. "What this game means is that we can match anybody physically."

This was the first close decision for the Skippers since week one, when they defeated Cardinal Spellman, 7-0. In fact, when the host Crusaders opened the scoring with a touchdown on their third offensive play, it was the first time all year that the Skippers had been trailing.

"I don't think anybody panicked," said the coach, whose team trailed 8-6 at halftime. "We just made some defensive adjustments."

The adjustments proved very effective, as the Skippers held the Crusaders scoreless for the final three and a half quarters.

The defense focused on shutting down Carver's running game. The Crusaders only attempted two throws downfield, and one was intercepted by senior corner back Eric Libby, his second of the season.

"He is the real deal," lauded Rolfe of the first year football player, a transfer from soccer.

Carver did threaten to score on several of their lengthy drives. However, Rolfe said that Carver's extended offensive possessions did not fatigue his defensive unit.

"I think we played out best defense in the fourth quarter," he effused.

On offense, senior running back Jason Brown got Cohasset on the board when he broke loose for a 60 yard touchdown run in the first half.

"He can score every time he touches the ball," said Rolfe. "Our job is to put him in a position to score, and we did that."

Cohasset continued its success in mixing up the run with the pass, with junior quarterback Mike Snowdale connecting to fellow junior Tom Anderson six times. Snowdale finally produced the game winner midway through the final quarter, a 33-yard touchdown strike to sophomore wide receiver Chris Bilodeau.

Snowdale notched his eighth touchdown pass of the year, tops among all Div. 5 Massachusetts quarterbacks.

"Our passing game was as strong as it has been," Rolfe was pleased to report. "Mike is so steady, and I don't see that changing."

Cohasset did not have its cleanest game two weeks ago, racking up four fumbles and an unnecessary pass interference penalty. Rolfe felt that this game was very different, because his team knew how impor-

Late Baird goal lifts Cohasset boys past Norwell, 1-0

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

After what happened in the first of their two regular season showdowns, the one thing that seemed certain going into game number two was that Cohasset would not be outworked.

Both the Norwell and Cohasset boys soccer teams played hard for all 80 minutes in last Wednesday's eagerly awaited rematch— leaving it all on the field, so to speak. It was everything a fan could want in a game between longtime league rivals fighting for first place.

Unlike the first go round— a 2-1 Norwell win on Sept. 20— the Cohasset players seemed to have just a little more in their tanks. They clearly won the battle for more of the 50-50 balls and created more quality scoring chances. In the end, they earned the 1-0 win—Tim Baird kneeing home the game's only goal in the 67th minute off of a flurry in front fol-

Field hockey team continues to progress

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Although the results were 50-50 for the Cohasset field hockey team this past week, the impressions were all positive from coach Deb Bostwick, who continues to insist she sees better and better things from her young, rebuilding squad virtually every time out.

The girls got their second win of the season on Friday, a 1-0 decision over Hull that wasn't as close as the score might indicate. A first half Heather Peraino goal off of a nice corner pass from Sarah Brady provided all the offense the Lady Skippers would require.

The host Cohasset squad dominated the proceedings in every area, as attested by their 11-2 advantage in corners for the match.

"This was a great effort to build on," Bostwick said following the game. "The only thing missing was the goals, but those will come if we keep working at it like we have been."

The veteran coach had particular praise following this game for junior fullback Kimmy Ulmer and sophomore halfbacks Danielle Pinkus and Rachel Doyle.

The Lady Skippers made the long trek south on Saturday for a match with Harwich (8-0-3, 5-0 in league), an instant powerhouse in their first year of South Shore League play.

From the tone of Bostwick's post-game remarks, one might have thought the Skippers had actually handed the host Rough Ryders their first loss of the season. As it turns out, Cohasset lost, 4-0, but the coach couldn't have been any prouder of the effort put forth by her charges.

The game was scoreless at half despite the fact that Cohasset was without three of its starting defenders: senior Suzanne Lynner was off checking out potential colleges, Frannie Noble was at a family reunion and Sarah Dennis was lost five minutes in when she took a smash off the thumb.

Harwich piled it on in the second half, earning the bulk of its 26 corners for the game, and converting on four of them. Cohasset goalie Sara Genovese was immense throughout, according to Bostwick, as were the replacement defenders.

Bostwick sounded especially pleased over the jobs done by Katie Silvia and Holly Dinsmore off the bench, as well as of Ulmer's ability to take her play to an even higher level to compensate for the huge voids.

"The girls who were out there today just did an incredible job," concluded Bostwick.

These girls just wanna have fun

Cohasset soccer team keeps on rolling

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

There is real honest to God excitement building around the Cohasset girls soccer program for what seems the first time in recent memory.

Certainly, at the least, this is the first year in recent times that anyone has seriously been mentioning state tourney and Cohasset girls soccer in the same breath.

With a huge tie against Norton on Tuesday, the Lady Skippers moved to two wins, five losses and two ties.

That may not sound like much, but when you consider the girls' record for the last five games is now 2-1-2, and that they finish the season with a whole bunch of seemingly winnable games…well, you get the point.

"More than anything else we're just really having a lot of fun right now," said fourth year head coach Deb Beal. "It's like all of a sudden the girls are getting it. We're doing things we've never done in my time here. We're playing real good team soccer."

If you're looking for more palpable evidence of the Cohasset turnaround, you need search no further than Tuesday's Norton game.

Three weeks ago, Norton absolutely lambasted the Lady Skippers at Cohasset High, 5-2.

On Tuesday, the girls made the nearly hour long bus ride to Norton High after school let out, were forced to start the game less than 15

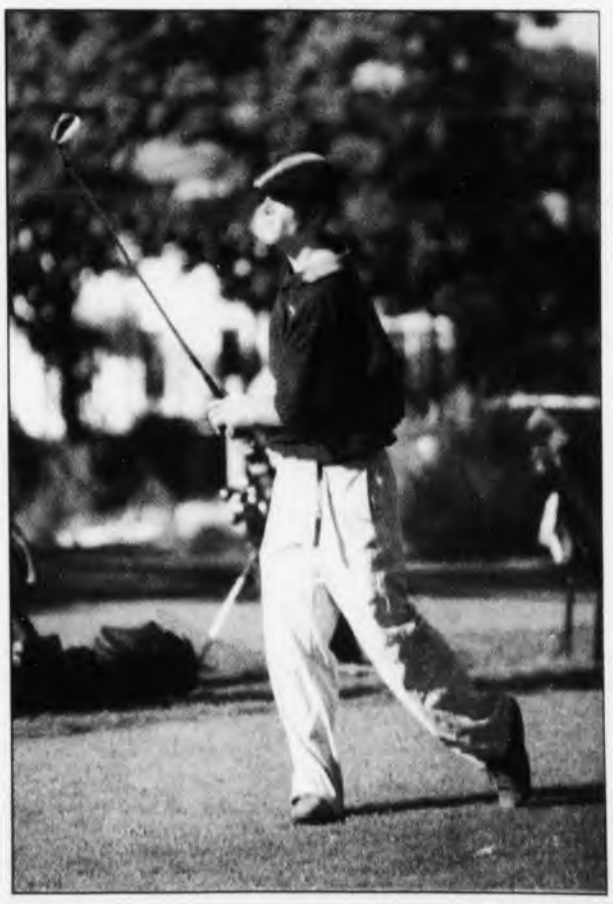
A Silvia lining for golf team

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The search for optimism can not be easy in the midst of a 2-7-1 season. Fortunately, Cohasset golf coach Torin Sweeney doesn't have to look too hard to find a Silvia lining.

Nope, that's not a typo.



Cohasset High freshman DJ Silvia has emerged as Cohasset's undeniable top golfer this season, which has provided Sweeney at least the comfort of knowing he doesn't have to worry about the top of his lineup card for the next three years.

"DJ approaches the game very seriously and is constantly working on his game," reported the second year head coach. "He's not quite there with the top tier players in our league yet, but he's made steady progress this year, and I'd say he's right there with that second tier of players at this point."

Silvia will join team captain Will Moody and one other Cohasset golfer (still to be determined) at the South Shore League tourney on Oct. 24. As it looks now, he'll also be likely be the Skippers lone representative at the Div. 2 Eastern Mass state tourney at the Easton Country Club on Oct. 23.

"The way he's going right now, I'd say that's a good bet," said Sweeney, pointing at the solid rounds of 39 and 40 he shot at Mashpee and Abington last week.

Mary Buxton, B.S., R.N., the director of South Shore Hospital's Stress Reduction Clinic will offer effective techniques for stress management on Monday, Oct. 15 from 7-9 p.m. in Bates Hall at the Second Congregational Church at 43 Highland Ave.

The clinic's advertising brochure explains that "Stress is the result of our reaction to all the events in our lives. Whether stress is helpful or harmful depends on the way we respond to these varied events." Unmanaged stress can result in physical illness — and physical illness and chronic pain can be sources of stress. People of all ages are encouraged to attend this informative presentation.

Weir River race

The Head of the Weir Race will take place Saturday, Oct. 20, at 11:30 a.m. The entry fee is $15, registration is required. The race will start from the West Corner Hingham-Hull line, to Windmill Point Boathouse, Hull, at Hull Gut.

One of the Hull Lifesaving Museum's most beloved events, the Head of the Weir, is a celebration of open-water rowing and both the beautiful Weir River Estuary and Boston Harbor in autumn.

The boats in Head of the Weir River Race jockey for position as they race out of the estuary and into the open water from West Corner (on the Hingham/Hull/Cohasset line), past Bumpkin Island, across Hingham Bay, to the museum's Windmill Point Boathouse.

A highly contested 51/2-miler, the Weir draws coxed youth and adult crews, single and double scullers, curraghs, and Alden ocean shells. It is an exceptionally exciting race and a great spectator event, featuring, typically, more than 30 boats and 150 of the region's finest rowers, including youth and adult crews from Boston Harbor, Maine, Vermont and New York.

Best views are from the bridge on George Washington Boulevard (5-to-15 minutes after the start), at the tip of Hull's Sunset Point, or at the boathouse finish line. Spectators should show great care crossing the road on George Washington Boulevard, watching for fast moving traffic.

Registration will begin at 9:30 a.m. behind the Hull Public Works building at the Hull town line on Route 228. For more information call Ed McCabe, maritime program director, at the Hull Lifesaving Museum, 781-925-5433.

Special exhibit open to all artists

The South Shore Art Center will present a national juried exhibition entitled Planes, Trains and Automobiles in the Bancroft Gallery, Nov. 9, 2001 - Jan. 5.

Jeffrey Keough, director of exhibitions for Massachusetts College of Art, will jury this exhibition.

The Planes, Trains and Automobiles exhibition continues the art center's initiative of presenting two national shows each year, juried by widely-acclaimed artists and curators. Last year's national exhibitions, Works on Paper, juried by New York artist and professor Howardena Pindell, and Photography Now, juried by Frank Gohlke a leader in contemporary American photography, had entries from more than 30 states. Entries are still being accepted for this year's exhibition. The show is open to all artists and all media with the work reflecting the theme of planes, trains and automobiles. Cash awards totaling $1,200 will be distributed. Jurying will be done on the basis of 35mm slides. Up to five slides may be submitted for consideration and entry forms and slides must be received by Oct.15t. For more information call 781-383-2787 or for an entry form visit www.ssac.org.

At a time like this, with our country in confusion, so many innocent Americans needlessly killed, it is hard to think about business. As Americans, we think of the families left behind, the sons and daughters that will never see their mothers or fathers again due to this horrible act that has befallen us.

Now, like so many times in our nation's history, the American people will, I'm sure, unite and together do whatever is necessary to overcome this horrible tragedy. It seems that none of us can do enough, yet no one can do too little.

I have the utmost sympathy and compassion for the victims of this crisis and the families left behind. They are in my prayers.

Skippers prove they're for real with 14-8 win over Carver

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High's football Skippers continued their perfect season last Friday, taking down the reigning South Shore League champions, Carver, 14-8.

Cohasset's defeat of Carver is the first in the 10 meetings they have had since the Crusaders entered the SSL in 1991. Fourth year coach Tony Rolfe had called this their first real test of the season.

"I'll stand by that," reported Rolfe. "What this game means is that we can match anybody physically."

This was the first close decision for the Skippers since week one, when they defeated Cardinal Spellman, 7-0. In fact, when the host Crusaders opened the scoring with a touchdown on their third offensive play, it was the first time all year that the Skippers had been trailing.

"I don't think anybody panicked," said the coach, whose team trailed 8-6 at halftime. "We just made some defensive adjustments."

The adjustments proved very effective, as the Skippers held the Crusaders scoreless for the final three and a half quarters.

The defense focused on shutting down Carver's running game. The Crusaders only attempted two throws downfield, and one was intercepted by senior corner back Eric Libby, his second of the season.

"He is the real deal," lauded Rolfe of the first year football player, a transfer from soccer.

Carver did threaten to score on several of their lengthy drives. However, Rolfe said that Carver's extended offensive possessions did not fatigue his defensive unit.

"I think we played out best defense in the fourth quarter," he effused.

On offense, senior running back Jason Brown got Cohasset on the board when he broke loose for a 60 yard touchdown run in the first half.

"He can score every time he touches the ball," said Rolfe. "Our job is to put him in a position to score, and we did that."

Cohasset continued its success in mixing up the run with the pass, with junior quarterback Mike Snowdale connecting to fellow junior Tom Anderson six times. Snowdale finally produced the game winner midway through the final quarter, a 33-yard touchdown strike to sophomore wide receiver Chris Bilodeau.

Snowdale notched his eighth touchdown pass of the year, tops among all Div. 5 Massachusetts quarterbacks.

"Our passing game was as strong as it has been," Rolfe was pleased to report. "Mike is so steady, and I don't see that changing."

Cohasset did not have its cleanest game two weeks ago, racking up four fumbles and an unnecessary pass interference penalty. Rolfe felt that this game was very different, because his team knew how impor-

Cohasset's Tim Baird gets a step on Norwell defender in Wednesday's huge win for the Skippers. Baird scored the game's lone goal to lift Cohasset to its first win over Norwell in eight years.

Late Baird goal lifts Cohasset boys past Norwell, 1-0

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

After what happened in the first of their two regular season showdowns, the one thing that seemed certain going into game number two was that Cohasset would not be outworked.

Both the Norwell and Cohasset boys soccer teams played hard for all 80 minutes in last Wednesday's eagerly awaited rematch— leaving it all on the field, so to speak. It was everything a fan could want in a game between longtime league rivals fighting for first place.

Unlike the first go round— a 2-1 Norwell win on Sept. 20— the Cohasset players seemed to have just a little more in their tanks. They clearly won the battle for more of the 50-50 balls and created more quality scoring chances. In the end, they earned the 1-0 win—Tim Baird kneeing home the game's only goal in the 67th minute off of a flurry in front fol-

Field hockey team continues to progress

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Although the results were 50-50 for the Cohasset field hockey team this past week, the impressions were all positive from coach Deb Bostwick, who continues to insist she sees better and better things from her young, rebuilding squad virtually every time out.

The girls got their second win of the season on Friday, a 1-0 decision over Hull that wasn't as close as the score might indicate. A first half Heather Peraino goal off of a nice corner pass from Sarah Brady provided all the offense the Lady Skippers would require.

The host Cohasset squad dominated the proceedings in every area, as attested by their 11-2 advantage in corners for the match.

"This was a great effort to build on," Bostwick said following the game. "The only thing missing was the goals, but those will come if we keep working at it like we have been."

The veteran coach had particular praise following this game for junior fullback Kimmy Ulmer and sophomore halfbacks Danielle Pinkus and Rachel Doyle.

The Lady Skippers made the long trek south on Saturday for a match with Harwich (8-0-3, 5-0 in league), an instant powerhouse in their first year of South Shore League play.

From the tone of Bostwick's post-game remarks, one might have thought the Skippers had actually handed the host Rough Ryders their first loss of the season. As it turns out, Cohasset lost, 4-0, but the coach couldn't have been any prouder of the effort put forth by her charges.

The game was scoreless at half despite the fact that Cohasset was without three of its starting defenders: senior Suzanne Lynner was off checking out potential colleges, Frannie Noble was at a family reunion and Sarah Dennis was lost five minutes in when she took a smash off the thumb.

Harwich piled it on in the second half, earning the bulk of its 26 corners for the game, and converting on four of them. Cohasset goalie Sara Genovese was immense throughout, according to Bostwick, as were the replacement defenders.

Bostwick sounded especially pleased over the jobs done by Katie Silvia and Holly Dinsmore off the bench, as well as of Ulmer's ability to take her play to an even higher level to compensate for the huge voids.

"The girls who were out there today just did an incredible job," concluded Bostwick.

These girls just wanna have fun

Cohasset soccer team keeps on rolling

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

There is real honest to God excitement building around the Cohasset girls soccer program for what seems the first time in recent memory.

Certainly, at the least, this is the first year in recent times that anyone has seriously been mentioning state tourney and Cohasset girls soccer in the same breath.

With a huge tie against Norton on Tuesday, the Lady Skippers moved to two wins, five losses and two ties.

That may not sound like much, but when you consider the girls' record for the last five games is now 2-1-2, and that they finish the season with a whole bunch of seemingly winnable games...well, you get the point.

"More than anything else we're just really having a lot of fun right now," said fourth year head coach Deb Beal. "It's like all of a sudden the girls are getting it. We're doing things we've never done in my time here. We're playing real good team soccer."

If you're looking for more palpable evidence of the Cohasset turnaround, you need search no further than Tuesday's Norton game.

Three weeks ago, Norton absolutely lambasted the Lady Skippers at Cohasset High, 5-2.

On Tuesday, the girls made the nearly hour long bus ride to Norton High after school let out, were forced to start the game less than 15

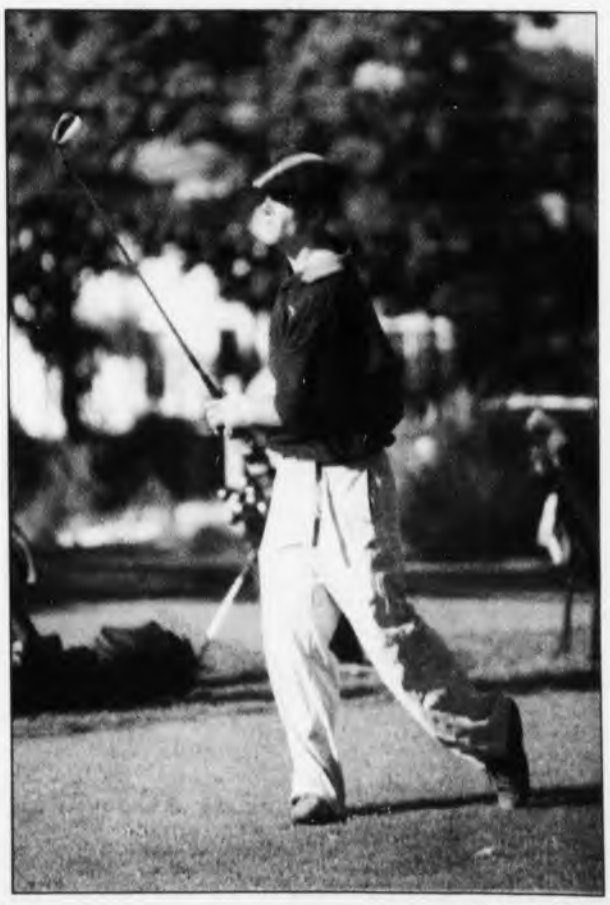
A Silvia lining for golf team

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The search for optimism can not be easy in the midst of a 2-7-1 season. Fortunately, Cohasset golf coach Torin Sweeney doesn't have to look too hard to find a Silvia lining.

Nope, that's not a typo.



Cohasset High freshman DJ Silvia has emerged as Cohasset's undeniable top golfer this season, which has provided Sweeney at least the comfort of knowing he doesn't have to worry about the top of his lineup card for the next three years.

"DJ approaches the game very seriously and is constantly working on his game," reported the second year head coach. "He's not quite there with the top tier players in our league yet, but he's made steady progress this year, and I'd say he's right there with that second tier of players at this point."

Silvia will join team captain Will Moody and one other Cohasset golfer (still to be determined) at the South Shore League tourney on Oct. 24. As it looks now, he'll also be likely be the Skippers lone representative at the Div. 2 Eastern Mass state tourney at the Easton Country Club on Oct. 23.

"The way he's going right now, I'd say that's a good bet," said Sweeney, pointing at the solid rounds of 39 and 40 he shot at Mashpee and Abington last week.

freeing a corner kick from Matt Bilodeau.

These were points conceded by first year Norwell head coach Jack Browne. "Our kids played hard but it just seemed like (Cohasset) wanted it a little more. They kept getting to the ball first, and they did a nice job of controlling the tempo. I've got to give them their due."

After what happened on Sept. 20, the fire exhibited by the Skippers on Wednesday couldn't have been considered a surprise to anyone. Cohasset also came out like gangbusters that night under the lights at Norwell High, pushing the advantage for practically the entire opening 40 minutes, but could sneak just one past Norwell's All-Star goalie John Conlan. It seemed as if the two teams switched uniforms at the half, because Norwell dominated right from the starting kick. The Clippers scored twice in this second frame, the second coming on a Shawn Collins header with 15 seconds remaining.

"I think that first game was still fresh in our minds," said Cohasset senior captain Matt Bilodeau, moments after the final whistle Wednesday night, basking in the glow of his first win over Norwell in nine attempts. "We didn't want another let down. This was a win we really needed."

Norwell had its chances in the first half, but not nearly as many as the opportunistic Skippers. If not for a couple of cat-like quick reactions by Conlan (10 saves for the game) in the early going, this game might have well been determined by halftime. The returning league all-star was particularly sharp in blocking a couple of in-close headers by Greg O'Connell and Evan Pestone off of beautiful set kicks from Bilodeau.

"He's an outstanding goalie, and he showed it tonight," said Cohasset head coach Dave Nigro. "I thought we created a lot of nice opportunities, but (Conlan) did a great nice job of covering up."

Cohasset was even more dominant in the second half, maintaining decisive edges both in terms of possession and territory.

Several deep Cohasset pushes were thwarted by another Norwell returning All-Star, Pete Donovan. The senior sweeper repeatedly frustrated the Skippers forwards by muscling them off the ball and stepping into passing lanes at just the right moment, and then using one of the strongest legs in the SSL to boom the ball well out of harm's way.

It was a relentless push from Cohasset junior Kurt Kahn one-one-one with Donovan that set up the game's lone goal with just 13 minutes remaining. The two players wound up wrestling for the ball to the left of the goal near the end line for several seconds before Kahn gained an edge and tried to cross it. Donovan stuck his leg out, deflecting it over the end line.

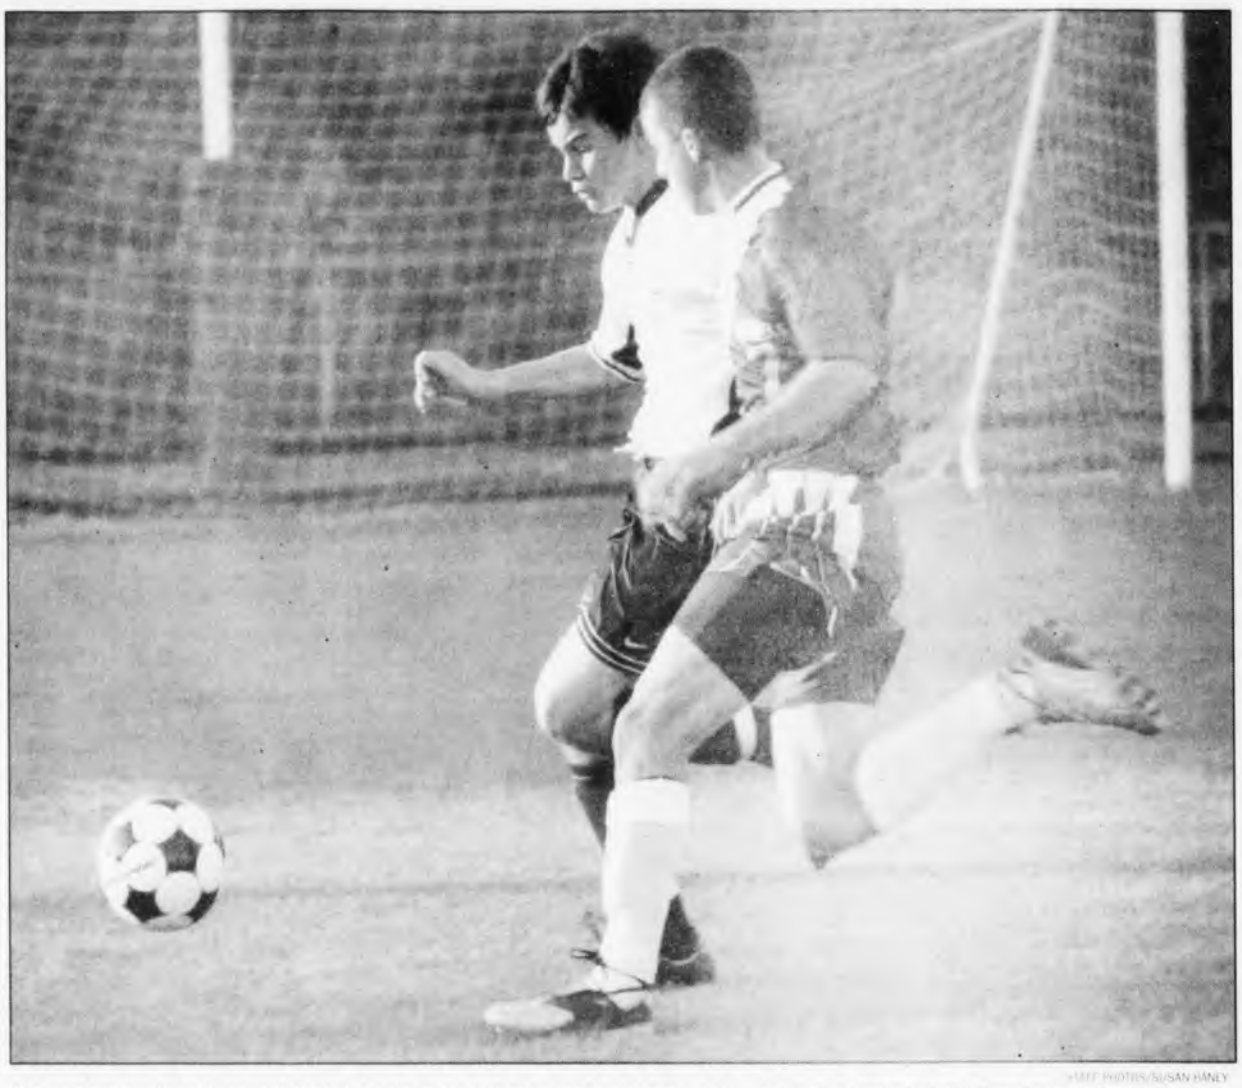
Bilodeau served up a near perfect ball into the middle of the box. O'Connell broke diagonally towards the near post on the boot, just missing as he went high for the header with a defender on his back. However, Dan Kinchla, taking a path five feet to the rear, managed to get his head squarely on the ball to put it over a quick-reacting Conlan. The shot caromed off the inside of the cross bar and came almost straight down, bouncing two feet out from the goal mouth as Conlan hit the ground. With bodies colliding left and right in the ensuing scramble, Baird somehow managed to take the ball chest to knee to top left corner.

The goal did not come without controversy, as many on the Norwell side complained that Baird used his arm to direct the ball to his knee – Conlan among the most vociferously.

To his credit, coach Browne would not comment on the non-call following the game.

"When you keep giving up good opportunities like we gave them, sooner or later you're going to get burned," was all Browne would say about the goal.

Donovan, a Norwell tri-captain along with Conlan and injured stopper Jason Kustka, followed his coaches lead.



"That was just a hard fought game between two real evenly matched teams," offered Donovan. "It was the type of game where you knew it would be decided by one nice bounce or big play. There's just not much of a difference between us. It would be nice to get them again."

The only way that happens is if the two teams meet in the Div. 3 Southeast sectionals.

As to the matter of fortuitous bounces, Bilodeau was quick to point out "it's about time we got one of them."

The Clippers bested the Skippers by just one goal in each of the four meetings prior to this past Wednesday's tilt. The loss on Sept. 20 was perhaps the most dramatic, but the 2-1 loss 11 months earlier, in the semifinals of the southeast sectionals, was decidedly more painful.

"This (win) doesn't make up for that," said Bilodeau. "But it does feel good for now."

Skippers fall to Norton

Unfortunately, the Skippers run at first place in the SSL came up short on Tuesday, as they fell to Norton (8-0-2) at home, 2-1, to fall to 7-2-1.

A couple of defensive breakdowns let the visiting Lancers take a quick 1-0 lead in the first half, and then score the game winner with eight minutes left in the game.

Kahn scored the Skippers lone goal on a pass from Baird 10 minutes into the second half.

"We had plenty of opportunities in the game," said Nigro, following the loss, pointing at shots from O'Connell and Bilodeau that flew just over the cross bar. "Against a team like Norton, you don't get too many chances. If you don't cash in on them, you're in trouble."

Norwell (8-1-1) now sits all alone in second place between Norton and Cohasset. The Clippers will get their shot at regaining first place next Friday when they travel to Norton.

Cohasset took down Mashpee on Friday, 2-1, thanks to a pair of second half goals by O'Connell, both of them assisted by Bilodeau. The game winner was delivered with just five minutes left in regulation.

The game was not as close as the score might indicate, as the Skippers again maintained a strong territorial advantage throughout the contest.

Cohasset captain Matt Bilodeau takes his time trying to set a play near midfield. Bilodeau assisted on the game's lone goal, serving up a perfect corner that Tim Baird eventually managed to knock home.

Coastal Stars Game of the Week

The life of a youth hockey player is marked by a series of transitions.

The fledgling skater goes from pushing a crate under the watchful eye of his parents to an instructional player. The instructional player transitions from a small instructional ice surface to the "big" rink for the start of the Mite year. The Mite transitions to Squirts, where the focus moves from instruction to development. The Squirt moves into their Pee Wee years where they learn to check. The Pee Wee sees the game intensify and speed up once they become Bantams. And finally, the committed few who still remain are ready for their rock and sock "em Midget years.

While each new level brings with it new challenges, there is no transition as exciting as the instructional player becoming a Mite-C.

Seeing a first year Mite getting accustomed to a larger ice surface while trying to master icing and offsides makes for the some of the most enjoyable hockey moments that parents, players, and fans will experience.

This past weekend was the opening weekend for the five Coastal Stars Mite - C teams. While all the C teams played well, it is Coach Dave Denton's Mite C-1 team that makes it to this week's game of the week.

At a pre-dawn match up this past Saturday morning in Raynham the Coastal Stars' Mite C-1 team defeated a Duxbury C team 5-1 .Coach Denton who is assisted by Vern Langley and Joe Redfearn, attributed the victory to his dedicated core of parents who ensure that their children attend and prepare for every practice.

The Stars began their offensive attack early in the first period when Patrick Cull, on his first shift, scored two quick goals. Cull's first goal was the fruit of line mates Jamie Faber and Austin Hale's hustle and effort. His second goal came off of an unassisted break-away.

The Stars started the second period with a two goal cushion and quickly saw the lead expand with Ryan Talanian registering his first of two goals.

Duxbury finally answered the Stars tallies with a goal of their own to close the deficit to two by the end of the second period.

The third period saw a continuation of the Stars' offensive dominance, as Talanian notched his second of the day with help from line mates Willie Brown and Zach Monaco. Brown, the gritty Cohasset winger, put the game out of reach later in the third with help from Cohasset neighbor Vinnie Calario as he scored his first goal.

And so in this first game- in this first in a series of youth hockey transitions, the Coastal Stars marched triumphantly into their Mite years with a hard fought victory.

minutes after disembarking and then gave up the game's first goal just 3:25 in.

Deb Beal swears her old team would have collapsed at that point. Not the new and improved "getting it" Lady Skippers, however. The local girls composed themselves, stayed patient and finally cashed in when the right opportunity was there. Approximately three minutes before half time, captain Kate Grimm notched the equalizer.

That would be all the scoring on this cold afternoon, though the visiting Skippers did manage to ring a couple shots off the crossbar in the second half. No one on Cohasset's side was complaining afterwards, however.

"This was a continuation of the good things we've been doing in the last few weeks," lauded Beal. "If we keep this up, I see us making a very strong run at the tourney."

Of the nine games left on their schedule, Beal feels Friday's showdown with first place Abington (8-0-1) is by far the most difficult. She is looking at it, first and foremost, though, as a litmus test to see how far her girls have really come since being whitewashed by the Green Wave, 3-0, in the first go-round back on Sept. 21.

"I told the girls a tie would be great and a win would be unbelievable, but more importantly I told them I want to see how they battle against a very tough team," said Beal.

Following this "test," the Lady Skippers are slated to finish up in-league play with Hull (1-8-1) and Carver (1-6-2) twice (one being a makeup game). They also have Scituate (4-5-2) and Holbrook (7-2, but playing in a weak Mayflower League) scheduled for a pair of non-league home-and-home series.

"Obviously, it's a lot easier said than done, but I feel like we have a shot at winning any or all of those games," said Beal. "And, more importantly, I think the girls believe it themselves right now."

So what exactly are the girls doing so much better these days than they were earlier in the season?

A lot of little things, according to Beal, but they all add up to one big thing.

"Everyone is getting involved," offered the coach. "The defenders are getting the ball to the midfielders, the midfielders are getting it to the forwards and we're finishing our opportunities."

Captain Maggie O'Neill, at center-midfield, has been called "the glue" by Beal since day 1. The senior continues to own the middle of the field in most games, but now she is getting plenty of help – which takes a lot of pressure off her, and thus makes her even more effective.

Jen Buckley and Yasmine Ashfar impress Beal more and more every game with their play at the outside mid spots. They are, in the coaches estimation, the best conditioned athletes on the team, and now that the team has a game plan that's working, this is an asset that's really starting to pay dividends.

"Those two can run all day, and their ability to get the ball from the defense at anytime and just go with it up the sideline to get our transition going is huge," said Beal.

Fullback Julie Condon has been one of those chiefly responsible for starting the break, her tough tackles and long clears proving instrumental in quick field reversals. And the other fullback, sophomore Brenna O'Donnell, is one of the most improved players on the team, according to Beal.

Meanwhile, Holly Graham at sweeper and Maura McKenney at stopper have been the keys to stopping the opposing breaks.

"The defense Holly and Maura have given us in the middle of the field has just been incredible," said Beal. "I can't imagine there are too many stopper/sweeper combinations playing much better than them right now."

And the contributions are from many different sources – Grimm, Nicole Neville, Molly Flanagan, Becky Ross, sophomore Gillian Weber.

"That's what's so good about this right now," concluded Beal. "So many people feel like they're contributing. That's one of the things that is making this so fun right now."

Unfortunately, the rest of the team hasn't rounded into form quite as well.

The Skippers fell at their home Cohasset Country Club course to a much improved Abington team last Thursday, 8.5-0.5. Cohasset's number four player, Greg O'Brien, earned the half a point by tying his match with a round of 52.

Despite the difficulties of late, coach Sweeney remained upbeat about the team.

"This is obviously a rebuilding year with a lot of first year players, but I give the kids a lot of credit for the way they've hung in and competed," said Sweeney, who is also Cohasset High's head wrestling coach and assistant athletic director.

Specifically, Sweeney says he has been pleased with the progress in recent weeks shown by senior Ian Kidder and sophomore first year player Mike Hajjar.

Cohasset did manage to pull out a big 7.5-1.5 victory over Carver on Tuesday, at Carver's home Squirrel Run par-3 course.

Silvia was low man out of his number one spot with a 35, followed closely by Moody at number two with a 36. Pat Reardon (39), Greg O'Brien (40) and Hajjar (42) also managed to earn points from the numbers three, four and six positions, respectively.

tant it was.

Cohasset could put itself in a very good position to compete for the League Crown with a win over Norton in two weeks. Although the always competitive Norwell and Abington teams stand in their way, Cohasset has already doubled its SSL win total from last year.

The way the team is playing, Cohasset seems to be clicking in all facets of the game: offense, defense and special teams.

Said Rolfe of his success at that halfway point of the season: "That is what is making us such a good team right now."

Beechwood has lots of secrets to share

By Rebecca Bates-McArthur
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

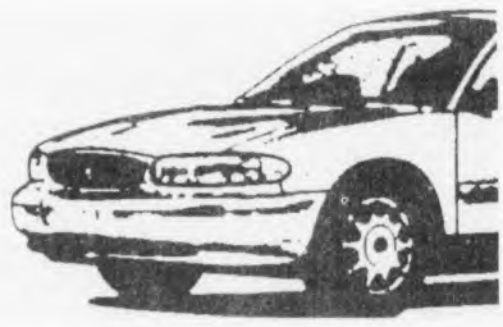
Stonework on Tuttle Island, Beechwood, the former site of a gristmill, sawmill and ironworks.

The Beechwood section of Cohasset comprises the area defined by the upper end of Beechwood Street, Doane Street, Church Street and the neighborhood developments off these streets. Depending on which people you talk to, Beechwood ends at the Beechwood River (Bound Brook) or at the intersection of Beechwood and King Streets (Reed's Corner). Beechwood was named after the Beech Woods, the clusters of Beech trees found in the area. Beech trees have smooth bark (great for carving names) and grow tall and straight. The area was originally part of the Third Division of Hingham.



The early settlers of Beechwood were involved with survival, farming and products of the soil. Because of the distance from Hingham, some nine miles, and from Cohasset center (known as such after 1770), the people of Beechwood established many of their own village resources. A mill was put into operation in 1703, a cemetery was established in 1737, a school in 1757, a general store and post office in the mid 1800s, a fire station, a church in 1859 and a neighborhood hall and library in 1912.

In 1703, Mordecai Lincoln, ancestor of Abraham Lincoln, built an iron works along the river on Tuttle Island, at the end of Mill Lane. In the past 300 years, there had been many mills at this site. Daniel Lincoln operated a sawmill at this site in 1704. A tannery and grist mill run by John Wheelwright was built in 1750. Another sawmill operated from 1814 to 1930. Most recently, lobster traps were produced here.

The Beechwood cemetery was built on land donated by the early settlers, Aaron Pratt and Isaac Bates. It was administered by a group of residents. The original section was divided into six lots, one for each family group. In this section, Isaac Tolman is buried. At the age of 24, he traveled to Boston with two other boys from Cohasset to take part in the Boston Tea Party. The cemetery has been expanded recently, and in the early 1900s the cemetery was squared off and in the 1990s an additional section on Beechwood Street was cleared. Wrought iron gates guard the entrance to the cemetery. A brick building crypt at the top of the hill, where bodies were placed in the winter, was restored by the historical commission. In 1958, the Beechwood Cemetery Association turned the cemetery over to the town. Each Memorial Day, the families, friends and neighbors of Beechwood pay homage to those who fought and died and are buried in the cemetery.

A school was established in 1757 to educate the children of the neighborhood. Children from the age of five and up were schooled there. According to the Bigelow town history, 63 children attended this school in 1796. When a centralized high school was established in the mid-1800s, the older children went to the new school by "barge," an open wagon fitted with wooden benches and stools for the children to sit on. When the elementary school on Ripley Road opened in 1927, the Beechwood school closed and it was auctioned off and converted into three residential apartments. To be continued.

Nature photographer is shooting for success

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Puppies. Plants. Landscapes. Seascapes.

Scituate resident Peggy Roth Major likes to capture them all on film. Taking pictures is her passion.

Major, 45, has been a photographer for the past 25 years and during that time, her style has not changed. She has always been a nature photographer, and she said she will remain a nature photographer as long as she is able to pick up a camera.

"I think my style is the same it always has been, it's just gotten more fine-tuned," she said. "My work always has and still does showcase my love for nature. I've always loved taking pictures outside, and I think nature is really the ultimate teacher."

Major is not the only one who enjoys her work—the public loves it too. At a recent solo show Major had at the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell, she sold a large portion her work on display.

"It went better than I expected," she said. "For a long time, I was doing photography for my own selfish pleasure, and it was only recently that I decided to start showing my work." She added the show at the science center was her first one.

In addition to the successful show, Major has also been making "note cards" out of her photos, and she is selling them in stores across the South Shore in towns like Quincy, Hull, Scituate, Humarock, Cohasset, and also in Boston.

At the same time, Major also has an extravagant web site illustrating many examples of her work. But her photography work isn't the only thing that fills her days. Major works at Boston Gear in Quincy during the day, but when she has free time, she heads outdoors with her camera and starts shooting again.

"I take my camera with me as much as possible," she said. "I'm always keeping my eyes open."

When she started taking pictures Major said she seemed to have a knack for spotting a good shot, and that has lasted throughout her career.

"Instinctively, I've always been a very visual person," she said. "I've always been able to capture the moment and interpret what I see in my own way. I like to capture things that the ordinary person would not necessarily see."

Major likes to feature a number of different elements in her photographs, but some of her favorite pictures she has taken illustrate the changing of seasons. She said she's never done much in the way of photographing people, but she's thinking about getting into that realm.

Major has embraced digital photography, a development that has revolutionized the field.

"I love the instant gratification of digital photography," she said. "You can work with the pictures you take right away. It makes taking pictures a lot easier in terms of not having to shoot a whole bunch of different rolls of film."

But Major said she still has a 35mm camera, and she still uses regular film some of the time because she does not have a computer handy all the time, which is required for digital work.

Her love of digital photography is what led to her making her note cards and starting up her web site.

The sky's the limit for Major it seems, but she says she still has many goals to accomplish.

"I'd like to have some larger-scale presentations and shows," she said, "and I've even considered opening my home by appointment for people to see my work. I'd also just like to spend more time taking pictures, and then get more visible in the Boston area, maybe even New York. I'm in no rush, though. I'm just going to take it one step at a time, and I want to continue making people happy with my work."

To check out Major's web site, log onto www.townonline.com/south, you'll find some of her note cards, visit The Welch Company (Scituate, Hanover), the Armstrong (Cohasset), Humming Rock Gifts (Humarock), the Furniture Gallery (Scituate), Mermaids (Hull), or Presidential Camera in Quincy. For any further questions call (781) 545-5444.

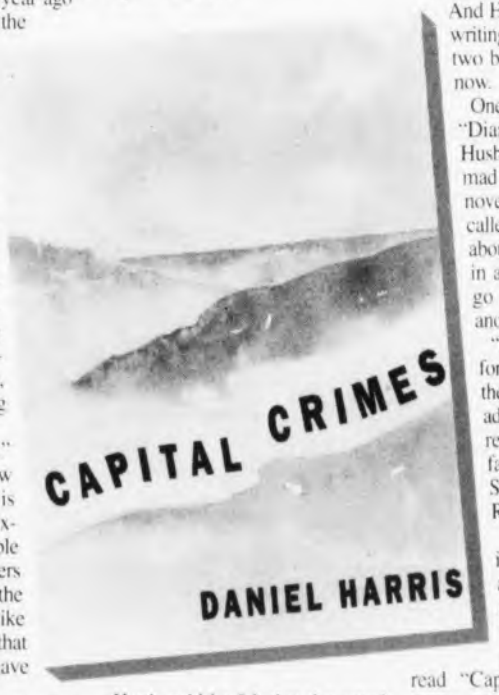
Doing time, writing 'Crimes'

Hingham novelist to release second book

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Hingham author Dan Harris has a problem—he can't stop writing books.

Next month, Harris will celebrate the release of his second novel called "Capital Crimes," a story focusing on high finance and murder. But it was less than a year ago that Harris was celebrating the release of his first novel "Goodbye, Dearie," which is selling well and earning good reviews.



"I guess you could describe the new book as a murder mystery that follows the money trail," Harris said. "Capital Crimes" is set in a fictional Cape Cod town. The story focuses on a construction company trying to build a housing development when all of a sudden, dead bodies start showing up a the site.

"Wild things happen," Harris said, noting the new book, like the last one, is laced with humor and unexpected twists. "I think people will really like the characters and the dialogue within the book. I think people will like the characters so much that they hope none of them have committed the murders."

Harris said the idea for "Capital Crimes" came to him by watching local planning board meetings and observing how the audience and the board members interacted. In the end, Harris decided that interaction could provide the basis for a good story.

At the same time, writing "Capital Crimes" was a lot different than writing "Goodbye Dearie" for Harris, because of the two novels' respective styles.

"'Goodbye Dearie' was somewhat autobiographical," Harris said, "and in fact, that book was made up of a number of different styles of writing. The new book is a total work of fiction. But at the same time, if I hadn't written 'Goodbye Dearie,' I would've never been able to write 'Capital Crimes.'"

Harris said he felt that the actual writing process of "Capital Crimes" was a lot more difficult because he was writing it in the third person, rather than the first person style contained in "Goodbye Dearie." In order to maintain his grasp on the story when he was writing the new book, Harris depended on the characters he created rather than himself.

"I depended on my characters and their dialogue to dictate the flow of the story," he said. "That's really how I kept the story together. A lot of authors like to outline their books before they start writing them. I put two characters together, have them start talking, and then they take me where I want to go."

Harris' characters have led him down the right roads, at least when it comes to his first two novels.

And Harris says he's not done writing books. He has another two books in the works right now.

One of the books is called "Diary of a Madhouse Husband" which focuses on a mad housewife. The other novel he is working on is called "Blood Feud," a story about people working within a supermarket chain and go to court against one another.

"If anyone has any ideas for a fifth book, I could use them," Harris quipped. He added he is influenced by reading many of his favorite authors like Stephen King, Richard Russo and Leon Uris.

"My goal for the future is to have fun doing this, and to avoid being a couch potato," he said. "In the meantime, I hope people take the time to read "Capital Crimes" when it comes out. It's got murder, mystery, and best of all, it's from a local author. Hopefully, people will like it."

For more information on Harris or to order one of his books, log onto Publishamerica.com or Amazon.com.

What's oldies is new at Vincent's

Mitch Ryder, Mark Lindsay make Randolph stop Oct. 17

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

In the mid 1960s, Mitch Ryder and the Detroit Wheels were about as wild and frenzied as rock 'n' roll could get, and on a particularly good night, it could get even wilder.

These days, the Detroit Wheels are long disbanded. But Ryder himself has for the past three decades carried on an off-and-on career as solo artist and frontman with other band projects in musical contexts ranging from confessional songwriter rock to contemporary, high-energy, house-shakin' rock 'n' roll to trading on the glories of his hit-making past on the oldies circuit, with varying degrees of critical and commercial success.

Ryder has spent most of the past decade touring internationally on various officially-billed Sensational 60s oldies-show packages, with his own current band as well as guest spots with ex-Paul Revere & the Raiders frontman Mark Lindsay and on double-bills with the present, oldies-circuit version of Gary Lewis & the Playboys among others. Ryder will once again be teamed up with Lindsay and his band as the two 60s-rock legends swing into Vincent's, off Route 128, Randolph, in the next installment of the club's Wednesdays Rock! concert series this week (Oct. 17).

"I've done these oldies show packages with Mark (Lindsay) and Gary (Lewis) and their bands since the early 90s, and it's been great," said Ryder. "I have my own band, and we work a great deal on our own. But I really enjoy these dates that I work with Mark, not only because I don't have the overhead costs that I have when I'm fronting my own band, but because musically our sets work together so well onstage. As headliner, Mark comes out and does solid, hard-driving rock 'n' roll for ninety minutes, singing both his old Raiders and solo hits and other rock standards, and I've found I can work my set into the program very nicely. I think our musical styles are similar and very compatible."

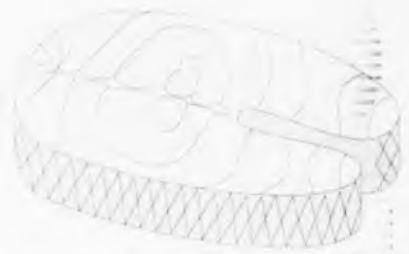
Ryder's hometown, Detroit, is famous for two major rock 'n' roll contributions during the 60s and 70s. First came the Motown hit-making factory, arguably the predominant force of 60s black soul/R&B. Later years brought the heavy, sweat-packed, guitar-grinding rock of Iggy Pop & the Stooges, MC5, Ted Nugent and Bob Seger.

Ryder and his Detroit Wheels stood as the vital link between the R&B roots and expression of Motown and the raw-power, Motor City Madness of those homegrown bands to come. The singer/frontman matched the gut-wrenching vocal skills of his greatest R&B influences (mainly James Brown and Little Richard) with the sonic, proto-punk/metal roar of the Wheels, featuring two well-noted members, guitarist Jim McCarty and drummer John Badanjek. Ryder and band parlayed their high-octane sound into three Top Ten 60s hits, including the power medleys "Jenny Take a Ride" (combining the 50s R&B hits "C.C. Rider" by Chuck Willis and "Jenny Jenny" by Little Richard) and "Devil With a Blue Dress On/Good Golly Miss Molly" (both of which Bruce Springsteen & the E Street Band would later turn into a 60s-rock-celebrating magnum opus in concert), and the explosive, salacious "Sock It To Me Baby."

Ryder, now 56, this year celebrated forty years in show business, which began when he recorded his first R&B single, under his given name William Levise, at age 16 in 1961. The Detroit Wheels formed under their original name Billy Lee & the Rivieras three years later.

"We were just a bunch of crazy white boys from Detroit. We loved to rock and roll and drink and have a good time. But we always leaned a lot more toward black soul and R&B than most of the other bands who worked the clubs with us. Looking back, I think it really made the difference in getting us noticed. And the buzz among our hometown fans back in those days was amazing," Ryder said.

Mark Lindsay



Touring these days with his own band as well as the other Sensational 60s stars, Ryder is perhaps most appreciative of his versatility and flexibility as a performing act.

"I've found that we can play all kinds of venues. We'll play at some sweaty country roadhouse on one date, and then the next we'll be at Disneyworld.," said Ryder. "We're able to move easily from one atmosphere to the next, and I find them all to be credible cultures and venues. They're good for rock and roll but still have that common touch."

6-minute tuna steak with spice crust

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

Christopher Kimball

Tuna is the seafood equivalent of beef since it is cut into thick, dark steaks and tastes rich rather than fishy. It poses two problems, however. It is pricey – over $15 per pound – and, for the most part, it can use some dressing up without overpowering the flavor of the fish. So I set out to find a recipe that added a modest amount of complementary flavor while also making the fish special enough to serve in modest portions.

The first question was the basic cooking method. I like simple so a sauté seemed best. Since a one inch thick steak is the most common size, I tested a variety of cooking times and found that 3 minutes per side was about right if cooked in a hot pan. This turns out a tuna steak that is the equivalent of medium-rare – merely browned on the outside yet still red in the middle.

The most obvious method for adding flavor was to use ground spices for a simple crust. I began with a combination of cumin, fennel, white peppercorns, and coriander but I had a hard time making this work since the cumin was overpowering and the white peppercorns had an unpleasant flavor. After much testing, I finally settled on 1 tablespoon fennel seeds, 1 tablespoon coriander seeds, and 1/2 teaspoon black peppercorns – each ingredient maintained its character as did the tuna steak. I found that either a spice grinder (a coffee grinder works well) or a simple mortar and pestle helped to grind the whole spices without turning them into a powder. (A rough texture improves the dish.) Some recipes suggest using egg whites to help bind the spices to the steak. I tested this and found them unnecessary. Other recipes suggest coating only one side of the fish with spices but I preferred coating both sides since the flavor of these spices was understated.

Next, I considered adding a simple sauce that could be drizzled over the finished tuna that had been sliced and fanned on a plate. However, I had to keep it simple since the recipe itself could be made in less than 10 minutes. A colleague at Cook's Illustrated suggested a simple maple syrup/soy sauce combination that is simmered for a few minutes and then allowed to cool. After testing various proportions as well as the addition of rice wine vinegar, mirin, and sherry, I finally settled on 1/4 cup maple syrup and 1/3 cup soy sauce. I combined the two ingredients in a 10-inch skillet over moderate heat. Once the sauce started to boil, I reduced it by half in just 2 to 3 minutes. At that point, it had thickened but was not quite syrupy. (It thickens further as it cooled.)

Finally, a few pointers. The time it takes to cook the tuna may vary a bit based on your pan and your stovetop. Some folks like their fish very rare - if that is your preference, 2 minutes per side is enough. However, I prefer 3 minutes on the first side and then 2 to 3 minutes on the other. Be prepared, however, to check the tuna at this point and continue the cooking process until is cooked to your satisfaction. A single large steak works best in this recipe since it makes for the nicest presentation - the slices are long and look pretty fanned out onto the plate. I also found that the tuna was juicier and easier to slice if the cooked steak sat for about 3 or 4 minutes before slicing. The tuna and sauce can be served alone but it is can easily be stretched to serve 6 people if you accompany it with a bed of greens or a salad.

6-MINUTE TUNA STEAK WITH SPICE CRUST

This recipe is equally good served alone, over a bed of greens, or along side a simple salad.

For the sauce
1/3 cup soy sauce
1/4 cup maple syrup, the darker and more flavorful the better

For the tuna
1 tablespoon fennel seed
1 tablespoon coriander seed
1/2 teaspoon black peppercorns
1 1-inch thick tuna steak, about one pound
Salt
1 tablespoon vegetable oil

1. For the sauce, place the soy sauce and maple syrup in a heavy-duty 10-inch skillet over medium-high heat. Once boiling, cook until the mixture is reduced by about half and thickened, about 2 to 3 minutes. Remove sauce to a small bowl and set aside. The mixture will continue to thicken and become syrupy as it cools. Wash and dry the skillet in preparation for the tuna.

2. Using a spice grinder or a coffee mill, grind the fennel, coriander and peppercorns together until well broken down but not powdery. Transfer the mixture to a plate large enough to accommodate the tuna steak. Lightly salt the tuna and dip each side into the spice mixture pressing lightly on the steak to help the spices adhere. Place the clean skillet over medium-high heat until hot, about 4 minutes. Add the oil and swirl to coat the bottom of the pan. Place the tuna steak in the pan and cook, without moving for 3 minutes. Turn the steak and cook for an additional 2 minutes for rare centers, 3 minutes for medium rare. (Time may vary - check steak at this point and continue cooking if necessary.) Remove to a cutting board and allow to sit for 3 to 4 minutes. Cut the tuna into 1/4-inch slices and divide evenly among plates. Drizzle with the sauce and serve immediately. Serves 4 to 6 as an appetizer.

Maintaining the October landscape

By Suzanne Mahler

Darkness had fallen by the time I managed to make preparations to contend with the weatherman's predictions for a series of chilly evenings and potentially killing frosts. I scurried about the gardens in a minor state of panic, hoping to preserve tender tropicals, vegetables and containers for the weeks and months to come. Decorative pots, large and small, overflowing with spectacular specimens of geraniums, coleus, lantana, sweet potato vines and dozens of delectable annuals were hauled into the garage and sunroom. Plastic bags were stuffed with dozens of clippings and as a last minute precaution, entire plants of coleus, salvia and impatiens were lifted and potted. Tender vegetables, herbs and perennials were covered with sheets, row covers and plastic to prolong their growth.

For many South Shore gardeners, the month of October is bittersweet. In typically colder areas, killing frosts tend to strike early in the month, often before we are ready to relinquish our need to nurture our flowering children. Meanwhile, gardening neighbors in warmer locales along our coastlines or those who cultivate their flowers in more sheltered areas may be fortunate enough to elude deadly chills until later in the month or perhaps, even into November. Eventually, often gratefully, temperatures plummet signaling the inevitable end to our growing season as plants enter dormancy and frosty evenings turn the foliage of delicate annuals black while the glorious yellows, golds, oranges and reds of sensational fall foliage come tumbling to the ground.

Once killing frosts blacken the foliage of tender annuals and vegetables and the leaves of perennials become brown and crispy, it is time to start the process of putting the gardens to bed. High on the priority list should be the digging and storing of what are termed "summer bulbs." Canna and calla lilies, caladiums, tuberous begonias, dahlias, and gladiolus should be lifted, dried and stored before freezing temperatures manage to damage their fleshy storage systems. Use a digging fork when lifting these tender bulbs to reduce the risk of bruising, slicing or injuring the bulbs which could lead to disease or rot during their winter storage.

Cannas, callas, caladiums, and tuberous begonias should be carefully lifted and dried in an airy, dark place, without danger of freezing for a few days. Cut off dead foliage and gently brush off dried soil. In heavy, clay soils, it may be wise to wash off crusty lumps attached to the bulbs with a still spray from a hose to rinse and clean the bulbs prior to drying rather than risk damaging the bulbs in an effort to remove hardened earth. Soil allowed to cling to bulbs during their storage may contain insects and diseases. Be sure to thoroughly dry damp bulbs to prevent winter rot.

The corms of gladiolus should be dug while the stems are still attached to prevent injury to the bulbs. Once they have been lifted, the stems can be cut to about an inch from the top of the corms and dried in the sun for a few hours. Cure for about 2 weeks in a well-ventilated area. Store in a cool, dry environment.

When dahlia foliage has turned limp and black from a hard frost, cut the stems back to 4 inches prior to digging and carefully loosen the clusters of fleshy, tuberous roots from the surrounding soil. Wash away any remaining soil and allow to dry completely for one or two days.

Be sure to inspect all dried bulbs for wounds, the presence of soil, or uninvited pests. Store the dried bulbs in shallow trays or porous bags containing dry peat moss, sawdust, perlite, or vermiculite which will absorb any excess moisture but will also prevent the bulbs from becoming dehydrated. Bulbs should not be exposed to freezing temperatures or excessive warmth during the storage period. Temperatures between 40 and 50 degrees are ideal. Brown lunch bags are handy for keeping bulbs through the winter months as they permit the bulbs to breathe but prevent the bulbs from drying out. Use one bag for each bulb; label the outside of the bag with the type and color of the enclosed specimen. If storing multiple bulbs together in boxes or trays, be sure to check them periodically during the winter months for any evidence of disease or insect infestations and remove any spoiled bulbs to prevent others from becoming infected.

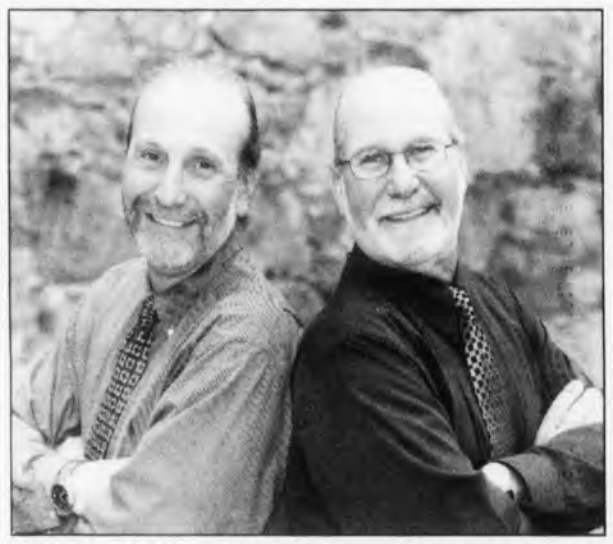
Despite many frosty evenings to come, our ground is not likely to freeze solid for weeks to come. Although most plants are entering a dormant stage, their root systems continue to absorb moisture and nutrients which are essential for their survival through the harsh winter months. Water is especially critical for new lawns, trees, shrubs, bulbs and perennials planted this fall and for evergreens whose foliage will be subjected to sun and desiccating breezes. For woody plants, a hose should be allowed to trickle at the base of the plant until the entire root ball has been soaked. Rainfall has been extremely sparse this fall and the ground is desperately dry. Supplemental watering should be provided until Thanksgiving if Mother Nature does not provide.

Barry and Elliot put adoption in spotlight

MARE program gets billing at Mamma Mia

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

When Barry and Elliot Tatelman, of the Avon-based Jordan's Furniture, signed on as title sponsor of the current Boston run of the musical "Mamma Mia!" the brothers and business partners knew that they wanted to do something more than just sell sofas.



"We realized a long time ago that 'Mamma Mia!' would be phenomenal," explained Barry by telephone last week. "It's a really upbeat show and a great story about finding family."

A funny yet poignant tale of family and relationships, fueled by 22 of the best-known songs of Swedish supergroup ABBA ("Dancing Queen," "S.O.S., "The Winner Takes It All), "Mamma Mia!" premiered in London in 1999. Its current North American tour has broken box office records in Toronto, San Francisco, Chicago, Los Angeles, and now Boston.

"We knew that thousands of eyes would be seeing this fabulous show here in Boston," says Barry. "We had to do something worthwhile. Our partnership with Massachusetts Adoption Resource Exchange (MARE) gave us that opportunity."

Together with MARE, Jordan's Furniture created video displays throughout the Colonial Theatre that provide information about adoption. A private, nonprofit organization, MARE recruits, educates and supports families through the adoption process. They seek to find homes for special needs children, sibling groups, and other children who are traditionally hard to place.

"Our mission with MARE is to find great homes for some great kids. The goal is to get kids adopted. There are hundreds of foster children within the Commonwealth who are ready for adoption today. We really want to help educate people about the process," says Barry.

Barry and Elliot Tatelman of Jordan's Furniture are giving the adoption program —MARE — they support a plug with the help of the musical production Mamma Mia on stage at the Colonial Theatre in Boston.

Jordan's Furniture has been a major supporter of MARE for several years, hosting events at their stores and contributing to their services. The positive results of the partnership have not been lost on the public.

"My wife, Susan, and I were at the first preview of 'Mamma Mia!' here in August. At intermission, a young man introduced himself and his girlfriend to us. He said that he was an adopted child and that he wanted to thank us for what we were doing for adoption. That really meant a lot," says Barry. "Since the show opened, MARE has received lots of calls in response to the displays at the theatre. It's a win-win situation for everybody."

("Mamma Mia!" continues at the Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston Street, Boston, through Nov. 3. For tickets and information, call 617/931-2787.)

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, OCT. 11

It may take a while for the morning fog to burn off. A lunar opposition to Neptune is in effect until mid-morning. Slow down and allow extra time to get where you are going. Potentially difficult influences pass over by 10:30 a.m., and the remainder of the day rates high for getting things done. Take on a full work agenda; you can be most productive. The moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn this evening, offering an opportunity to compose your thoughts, reflect, refocus.

FRIDAY, OCT. 12

A lunar opposition to Uranus can make for a hectic morning. Unexpected situations may arise that demand your immediate attention. Avoid rigid time schedules; go with the flow of things. The most favorable period for starting new activities occurs between 11:15 a.m.-12:34 p.m., when the Leo moon aligns with Mercury and becomes inactive. Plan to tie up loose ends in the afternoon and get an early start to the weekend. Forget your troubles and go for the good times this evening.

SATURDAY, OCT. 13

The moon enters Virgo at 12:58 a.m., remaining there throughout the weekend. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Virgo, interacts with Uranus, Mars and the sun. This combination may intensify the retrograde action of Mercury, generating unexpected obstacles, reversals, mechanical or electrical breakdowns. Making important decisions or signing contracts are definitely off limits. On the other hand, this combination of influences is prime for developing study, research projects or for making repairs or renovations. Challenging lunar alignments to Pluto and Saturn occur this evening. Keep a low profile. Meditate for inner peace.

SUNDAY, OCT. 14

Yesterday's planetary patterns affect today as well. The moon continues its travel in Virgo. The sun forms major alignments to Uranus and Mars. Stress management is important. Exercise more, eat light foods, avoid stimulants. Start new programs to help you to break bad habits.

MONDAY, OCT. 15

The Virgo moon aligns with Venus at 12:52 a.m. and becomes inactive. The moon enters Libra at 1:26 a.m., beginning the final windup to this month's new moon. This is a day to tackle jobs that have been left hanging and finish them; clean, reorganize, get rid of the clutter. Venus enters Libra at 7:42 a.m., remaining there until November 8. Take extra quiet time out for yourself today. Reflect on and learn from past experiences. Strive for greater spiritual vision.

TUESDAY, OCT. 16

Wake up in a good mood. The dark side of the new moon is in full force and effect. People may be hypersensitive, temperamental. Don't overpersonalize. Be more tolerant, forgiving. A kind word or thoughtful gesture can make all the difference. The new moon culminates at 3:23 p.m., 23 1/2-degrees of Libra. At this time the moon becomes inactive. Enjoy a romantic evening with the love in your life.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 17

At 2:32 a.m. the moon enters Scorpio, remaining there today and tomorrow. However, the planet Neptune takes the spotlight. At 9:49 p.m. Neptune, standing at 6-degrees of Aquarius, begins direct travel. This is not a time to make practical, business decisions or purchases. It may be difficult to separate the facts from the wishful thinking. On the other hand, this combination enhances creativity and psychic abilities. You can experience breakthroughs in awareness and gain deep penetrating insights. Be sure to spend time alone. Open your heart to higher visions.

THURSDAY, OCT. 18

This a day to get things done. Take on a full work agenda. Tackle jobs that need repair, redoing, or projects that have been problematic. You can work out the glitches and find new solutions. The moon continues its travel in Scorpio, generating a serious, intense mood. Unexpected setbacks or distractions may surface between 11:10 a.m.-2:10 p.m., when the moon aligns with Uranus. At 6:40 p.m. the moon interacts with Mars and becomes inactive.

FRIDAY, OCT. 19

The moon enters optimistic Sagittarius at 4:47 a.m. However, a 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Jupiter warns you to use common sense. Avoid making impulsive purchases, promises or decisions. Put new ideas on hold for a few days. Don't be a hermit tonight. An alignment of Venus and Neptune makes this evening prime for social and romantic activities.

SATURDAY, OCT. 20

The moon forms challenging contacts to Pluto at 4:36 a.m. and Saturn at 6:31 a.m. After that storm clouds move out, fair and sunny astrological weather returns for the remainder of the day. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can be productive. Carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. On the other hand, this day rates high for socializing and partying. Gather with friends and let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, OCT. 21

Take it slow and easy this morning. Enjoy favorite leisure activities; spend quality time with friends and family. At 7:42 a.m. the Sagittarius moon becomes inactive until 11:11 a.m., when it enters ambitious Capricorn. The remainder of the day is prime for getting things done. Catch up on work or study projects. Follow through on promises you have made to others; repay debts, fulfill commitments.

MONDAY, OCT. 22

Resolve to start this day with an upbeat, lighthearted attitude. Sidestep feelings of doubt, fear, frustration. Take on a busy work schedule; you can be most productive. The good news is that Mercury begins direct travel at 8:23 p.m., 14 1/2-degrees Libra. The next Mercury retrograde period will occur in January 2002. Plan to launch important new enterprises tomorrow evening, when favorable influences occur. In the meantime, clean up old business and get your ducks in line.

TUESDAY, OCT. 23

The sun enters Scorpio at 4:26 a.m., remaining there until November 22. The Capricorn moon urges you to keep your nose to the grindstone. Hard work will pay off. Tackle jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. At 4:12 p.m. the moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive. An Aquarius moon takes over at 9:26 p.m. The most favorable period for signing contracts and launching important ventures occurs between 9:26-10:42 p.m., when Mercury forms a harmonious contact to Saturn. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 10:58 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 24

The Aquarius moon aligns with Neptune in the morning, accenting the need for clarity and focus regarding details, minor points. On the other hand, this is a prime time for developing humanitarian or environmental programs. People will be receptive, supportive. The green light for new starts goes on at 11:00 a.m. You can start large-scale enterprises, make major purchases and decisions, set long-term plans and goals. The remainder of the day also rates high for social activities or romantic rendezvous.

THURSDAY, OCT. 25

There are bound to be some exciting developments in the next few days. Keep an open mind. Explore new horizons, develop alliances, set goals. You can break new ground at home or work. The Aquarius moon interacts with Uranus at 3:32 p.m. and becomes inactive. Uranus, the planetary ruler of Aquarius, is slowing its rate of motion, preparing for direct travel on October 30. An applying alignment of Venus and Pluto may spark romantic passions this evening. Take a walk on the wild side.

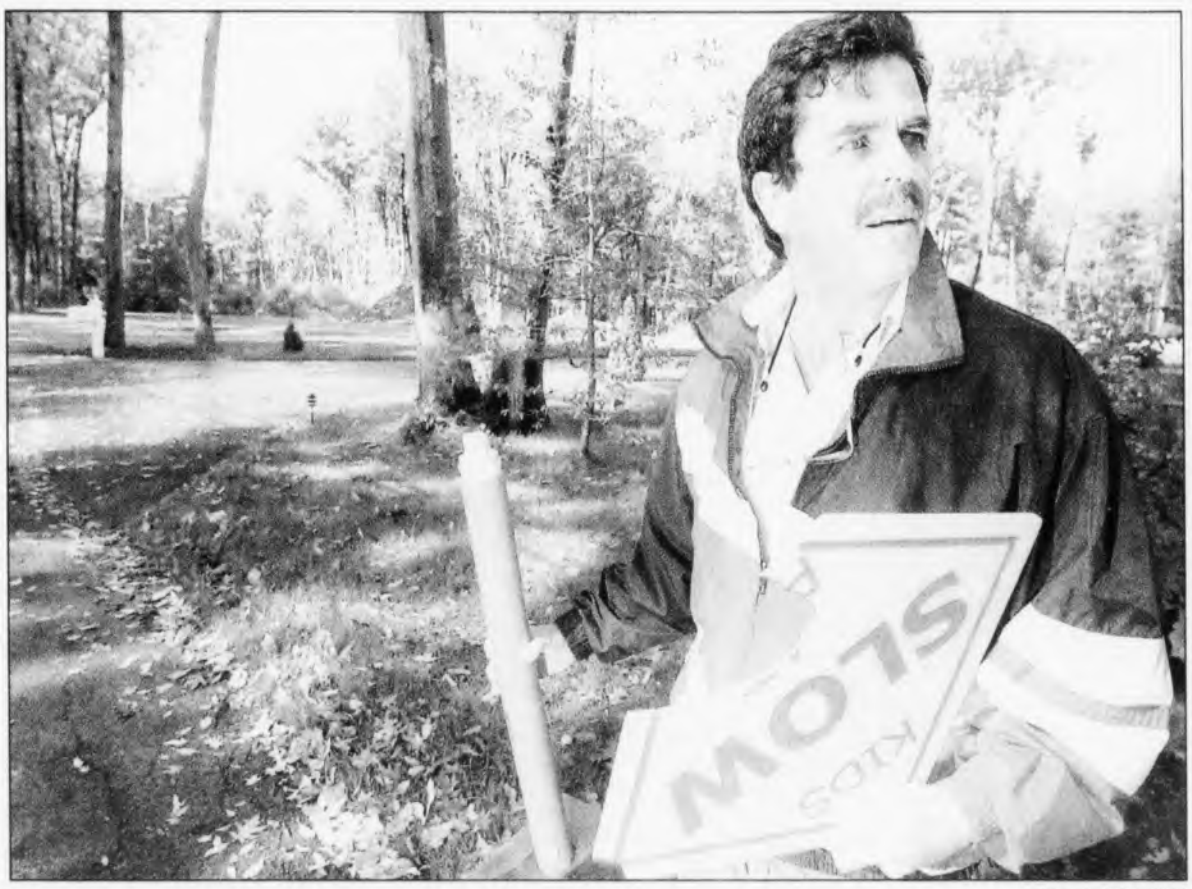
Transfer station rejected

But landowner hasn't given up

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset's Paul Barry is in a business that everybody needs but no one particularly likes — trash disposal.



The owner of Graham Waste Services, 110 CJC Highway, and Cohasset Heights Landfill approached the town last month about operating a 299-ton-per-day transfer station for processing construction and demolition debris on Crocker Lane off Route 3A near CHL, which closed its landfill operations four years ago.

"For some reason there is a stigma when it comes to private transfer stations," Barry told the Board of Health at a recent meeting. However, "if you notice, a lot of public transfer stations, including our own, are in residential neighborhoods."

In a letter to Barry stating they couldn't support his request for the facility, selectmen gave credence to the his comment that the general public finds private transfer stations poor neighbors.

"This is simply the wrong loca-

Tensions grow on Lamberts Lane

Golf Club traffic is an issue, residents say

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Where will children play? This line from a Cat Stevens hit in 1970 has been taken to heart by Lamberts Lane residents who are concerned about the safety of their children.

"It's not a place where you want your children running around and riding bikes," said Laurel Martinez, 136 Lamberts Lane.

Frank Zeven, 80 Lamberts Lane, seconds her thoughts.

"My two-year-old daughter can't go out in the street because of the irresponsibility of drivers. I can't even go for evening jogs because I'm afraid of getting run over," Zeven said.

The Lamberts Lane residents and the Cohasset Golf Club have clashed over two primary issues. The first is the increased traffic to Lamberts Lane caused by golf club members. The safety of the residents is of concern here. The second source of tension between the two sides is the newly expanded parking lot and its lack of screening. The residents complain the unobstructed view is an eyesore.

"There is great tension and animosity between the golf club and Lamberts Lane."
— Frank Zeven, Lamberts Lane resident

"There is great tension and animosity between the golf club and Lamberts Lane," Zeven said.

The sole entrance to the Cohasset Golf Club is located on Lamberts Lane, a narrow, winding road. The road is used by members of the golf club and Lamberts Lane residents. Up to 800 cars can pass along the road any given Saturday during golf season. While residents understand that the golf club was there first, they feel that's of little importance. "It's irrelevant who was here first, we're both here now," Martinez said.

The residents feel the golf club should have to face some type of regulation. The residents are con-

Logan runway plan is on hold

Lawsuit still goes forward

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Logan Airport's proposed runway plan is still alive, though not a top priority, according to Massport spokesman Barbara Platt. The plan is on hold until January, she said.

The new runway dubbed 14/32 would significantly impact Hull, Hingham and Cohasset. The new runway, if it becomes a reality, is expected to direct 75,000 more flights annually over Boston Harbor, which would affect area towns, according to Hingham jet noise task force members.

Cohasset native and former state senator William Golden has taken up the gauntlet in the fight to stop the proposed new runway. Golden, who is leading a joint lawsuit against Massport, says, "Massport's insistence to go along with the project shows their misplaced priorities. The expansion didn't make sense before the Sept. 11 tragedies and now it's just absurd."

Citing "fraudulent and deceptive" conduct by officials at Massport, Golden filed a lawsuit to stop the expansion. Hull, the lead communi-

Anchor planned for Govt. Island

By Evan Schiff

Herb Jason and John Small are at it again.

After building a monument on Government Island to two fallen lightkeepers, Jason and Small got approval to put a large anchor on Government Island near the sailing club.

The men procured the anchor from Plymouth and bought it for a reduced price once the owner learned of their intent. Jason and Small were able to hold the anchor on a $100 deposit before selectmen approved their project with no objection from the Government Island Study Committee. Jason and Small will now buy the anchor for approximately $4000.

The anchor and display will not cost the town anything as the men have already been promised a portion of the money. They intend to raise the rest of the money themselves.

A member of the Government Island Study Committee, Ham Tewksbury, said, "I think the Ledge, promoting senior housing and limiting growth

Planners to tackle issues at hearing

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

— news analysis —

Do you want a variance required before anyone can alter prominent ledge in Cohasset?

How about limiting new housing starts to 20 per year, until the Master Plan is developed?

Senior housing is sorely needed, officials say. So would you support relaxing zoning restrictions in your neighborhood to pave the way for more housing for those 55 years of age and older?

At this point, the zoning issues are all slated to come before the Nov. 5 Special Town Meeting.

But with opinions sharply divided in town, the topics are bound to be the source of controversy at the Planning Board public hearing at 8 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 24, at Town Hall. By law, the Planning Board must hold a public hearing on any zoning article before it goes to Town Meeting, chairman Al Moore said.

Granite outcroppings of ledge are part of what gives Cohasset its unique character. A group led by Beach Street neighbors — who say they are leading a town-wide effort — is asking for a change in the zoning bylaw to require a variance be obtained before ledge eight-feet in height or more can be altered in any way. Noted for its spectacular ledge, the Beach Street area behind Town Hall has been eyed by developers over the past several years.

The topics are bound to be the source of controversy at the Planning Board public hearing at 8 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 24 at Town Hall.

"We are trying to preserve the meaningful ledge that contributes to the character of the town," Mark DeGiacomo told selectmen at a recent meeting. If approved, the bylaw change would prohibit any alteration of prominent ledge in town without a variance, which can be difficult to obtain.

Proponents say the bylaw change is imperative to protect the remaining ledge in town. But opponents fear the regulation might have far-reaching effects, including prohibiting the new sidewalk planned on North Main Street in front of St. Stephen's, a project that would require some ledge removal. Selectman Michael Sullivan said the bylaw would be overly restrictive. He is also concerned about ledge that crosses property lines that might be eight-feet high in someone's yard and only three feet next door.

The town is in the throes of drafting its first comprehensive master plan in 40 years. There's an effort afoot to limit growth while the plan is developed. To that end, Town Planner Liz Harrington took an average of building permits issued for new housing starts over the past five years to come up with the proposal to limit them to 20 through 2003. From 1996-2000, building permits for new houses have averaged 19.6 per year.

But Selectman Tom Callahan thinks 20 is too high, given the size of Cohasset. "We need to maintain the status quo until we get our house in order," he said at a recent selectmen's meeting.

"It's not a moratorium if we allow that many to be built," he said. If 1998 — during which there were 32 new housing starts — is thrown out of the mix, then the average would be 16.8.

DA: e-mail discussions illegal

Sewer board violated OML

By Mary Ford
MFORD@SNC.COM

District Attorney William R. Keating's office has determined the Sewer Commission unintentionally violated the Open Meeting Law when its members held e-mail conversations last summer to discuss abatement requests.

In her ruling, Norfolk County Assistant District Attorney Ellen McCusker Devlin said the use of e-mail for housekeeping matters, such as meeting scheduling and cancellations, would not be a violation of the Open Meeting Law. But use of e-mail for other public business is a violation.

"This office has previously found that the Open Meeting Law is violated when e-mail conversations that relate to public business occur among a quorum of members of a governmental body," she wrote.

The Cohasset Mariner filed a complaint with the District Attorney's office when an agenda item under "new business" listed a confirmation of an e-mail vote. When questioned at the time, Sewer Commission Chairman Gary Vanderweil said the board voted by e-mail to expedite the process. The vote involved a sewer abatement request by the Cohasset Historical Society for the Maritime Museum on Elm Street.

Vanderweil explained the commission had previously agreed to grant the abatement but Town Counsel said it wasn't a good idea. So Vanderweil asked the members to send their votes by e-mail. The e-mail vote was later confirmed by a voice vote at an open meeting.

But minutes from the June 5 sewer commission meeting revealed the board also voted by e-mail on two abatement requests that were inadvertently omitted from an abatement package voted on at a regular meeting. They were voted on by e-mail the following week and that vote was later certified at the June 5 meeting.

Devlin said the office found the violations to be inadvertent and made in good faith.

At a meeting earlier this month over the historical society abatement request, commissioner Ray Kasperowicz reaffirmed the commission used e-mail to save time.

"There was no malfeasance involved," he said.

Devlin asked the Commission to address the issue of e-mail communications at its next meeting and to communicate to the public the Commission would not utilize e-mail to discuss public business. For the complete text of Devlin's letter, see page 7.

Upcoming meetings

The following meeting were posted at Town Hall as of Monday, Oct. 15:

Advisory Committee, 7 p.m., Oct. 18

Conservation Commission, 7:30 p.m., Oct. 25

School Committee, 7:30 p.m., Oct 18 at Cohasset High School Library

School Building Committee, 6 p.m. at Selectmen's Meeting Room

All meetings at Town Hall unless otherwise noted.

Special meeting on Hagerty House set

Selectmen will discuss the fate of the former Cohasset Colonials building, dubbed the Hagerty House, at their Nov. 13 board meeting. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the Cohasset Housing Authority is no longer interested in the building, which had been considered as a potential site for affordable housing.

Selectmen recently terminated the Cohasset Lobster Lab's lease of the building because of lack of progress. The Cohasset Maritime Institute, which leases the old boat house on the Hagerty property, is interested in using part of the building. Haddad said other issues for selectmen to consider are razing the building, selling the building or another compatible use.

Residents are encouraged to try and formulate ideas about the Hagerty House and share them with selectmen on Nov. 13.

Brush chipping

Residential brush will be accepted from 7 a.m.-3:30 p.m., Saturday, Oct. 27, in the DPW parking lot off Cedar Street. No trees more than 12 ins. in diameter will be accepted. This is for residential brush only, no contractors are welcome.

AvalonBay project delays 3A repaving

Re-paving Route 3A in Cohasset could be on hold until a decision is made on AvalonBay, a 254-unit apartment complex proposed for the former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor property across from Atlantic Bagel. In a memo to selectmen, state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said he spoke with the Massachusetts Highway Department regarding paving 3A.

"MassHighway is reluctant to repave without having the AvalonBay sewer line issued resolved beforehand," Hedlund stated. "To repave, only to have it ripped up and patched over would be disadvantageous to the integrity of the road."

AvalonBay is considering connecting the complex to the Hull Sewer System which would involve laying sewer main along Route 3A.

In a related matter, Town Manager Mark Haddad wrote to members of the Hull Sewer Commission requesting a meeting to discuss the availability of excess sewer capacity at the Hull plant.

"As you are aware, the Town of Cohasset has been looking for alternatives to address our sewer needs and continues to be interested if Hull has the capacity to assist Cohasset," Haddad wrote.

Haddad said Cohasset understood Hull has been in discussions with AvalonBay about wastewater disposal needs for its proposed apartment complex in Cohasset.

Library to ask voters at STM for $600K

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Nobody said reading comes cheaply.

Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees met with selectmen Tuesday to discuss additional funding for the proposed new library at the old Osgood School.

The low bid has come in at nearly $2.89 million, just shy of the $2.9 million appropriated at the March 2000 annual Town Meeting for the project. But with additional project costs such as moving, furnishings, shelving and computers – the total amount needed jumps $1 million to $3.9 million, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Initially, the town wasn't expected to have to pay anything for the new library. Voters at the March 2000 annual Town Meeting approved the project with three conditions:

- Library trustees would raise $700,000
- The Paul Pratt Memorial Library building on South Main Street would be sold
- And the library would receive a $1.5 million library construction grant from the state.

But times have changed.

Trustees have raised what they've promised and plan to add another $400,000 that will knock a good -sized hole in the $1 million needed.

The library didn't get the state grant – but is first on the waiting list and is fairly confident, the money would be forthcoming in the state's supplemental budget.

Put all that into the mix and the Nov. 5 special Town Meeting will be asked to appropriate an additional $600,000. The old Paul Pratt building could be worth more than the $700,000 estimate of three years ago and therefore, could reduce the town's share, Haddad said.

The good news is the project is popular with citizens, trustees say.

"We hear comments every day about how people are so excited about the new library," trustees chairman Patience Towle told selectmen.

Sheila Evans, another trustee, added, "there's absolutely nothing negative about this project, the town has donated a lot of money which proves its enthusiasm."

"There's absolutely nothing negative about this p roject."

— Sheila Evans, Paul Pratt Library Trustee

The current tax levy will support the request for the additional $600,000. Approximately $60,000 will be used to pay back the loan in the first year with the total amount to be paid back over 20 years, Haddad said.

With the town anxious to see construction begun on the library, Haddad said if the special Town Meeting awards the money he will appoint a contractor the next day. The bids were submitted on Oct. 10 and expire after 30 days, so choosing a bid shortly is needed.

Construction is expected to take 10 to 14 months. The low bidder was M. O'Connor Contracting of West Roxbury.

In June, the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners announced that it awarded over $16 million for the construction of 10 public libraries in Acushnet, Blackstone, Chicopee, Chilmark, Gardner, Leverett, Palmer, Provincetown, Rowley and Sunderland. While Cohasset wasn't awarded any money initially, it is first on the waiting list to receive a grant as soon as the funding becomes available.

The Cohasset project will be funded once either the legislature passes a supplementary budget allocating more money for library grants, or one of the libraries in the top ten doesn't receive permission to accept the grant and build a library from that town's governing body by December.

In a previous interview Towle told selectmen that being first on the waiting list, "means we are going to get that money."

Legal issues are on the runway

Selectmen got their first look at the 27-page lawsuit against Massport when they walked through the door for their Tuesday meeting.

Therefore, they felt it would be necessary to take the document home and read it before deciding on whether to appropriate money toward legal fees.

Last spring Town Meeting allocated $30,000 for a review of the environmental impact report on the proposed runway. After getting the results, selectmen are trying to decide if they would like to approve an additional $30,000 from the town's legal fund to join in the lawsuit with Hull and Hingham.

While selectmen don't consider the amount excessive, they are concerned how much more money would be needed to continue the suit.

In a lively discussion Tuesday night, selectmen aired their concerns for the project.

While many are worried about the potential loss of property value, estimated at a 2 percent loss for every decibel level that is increased, Selectman Michael Sullivan is not. "To say we're going to lose that kind of money is a scare tactic," he said.

Selectmen are also concerned about pollution from jet fuel emissions.

Selectman Thomas Callahan feels this an issue that should be addressed. "I support this lawsuit because I think the majority of the citizens of Cohasset would support it."

But to some, the airplanes are not that big of an problem. "I just don't hear them," said Sullivan.

Selectmen were urged to get back to Town Manager Mark Haddad as soon as possible with their decision.

Logan runway plan is on hold ty in the coalition, filed the 27-page complaint in superior court.

Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset joined forces this past spring with each appropriating $30,000 at their respective town meetings to pay consulting and legal costs in the runway battle.

Platt says Logan is currently the second most delayed airport for arrivals and runway 14/32 will reduce overall delays by one-third, finally knocking Logan off the list of the top ten most delayed airports.

Contrary to environmentalist's concerns, she said that runway 14/32 will reduce 500-700 tons of pollution from the air because of less time idling time on taxiways and circling overhead.

Platt says while Massport intends to build the runway, "safety and security are our foremost priority right now."

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, ranking minority member of the Joint Committee on Transportation, said in a meeting with Executive Director Virginia Buckingham and other Massport officials, it was clear the runway is on the back burner. Hedlund even went so far to say the runway could be halted indefinitely.

"The bottom line is directly from Virginian Buckingham's lips that Massport is freezing all runway activity for two months or longer and will be reassessing it once they get their other priorities in order," he said. Hedlund said putting the runway back on the priority list might depend on how world events affect Massport's ability to pay for capital projects.

He said Massport revenues are off significantly due to the economic downturn and 20 percent decline in air travel nationwide. Based in these factors, Massport is reassessing all capital projects.

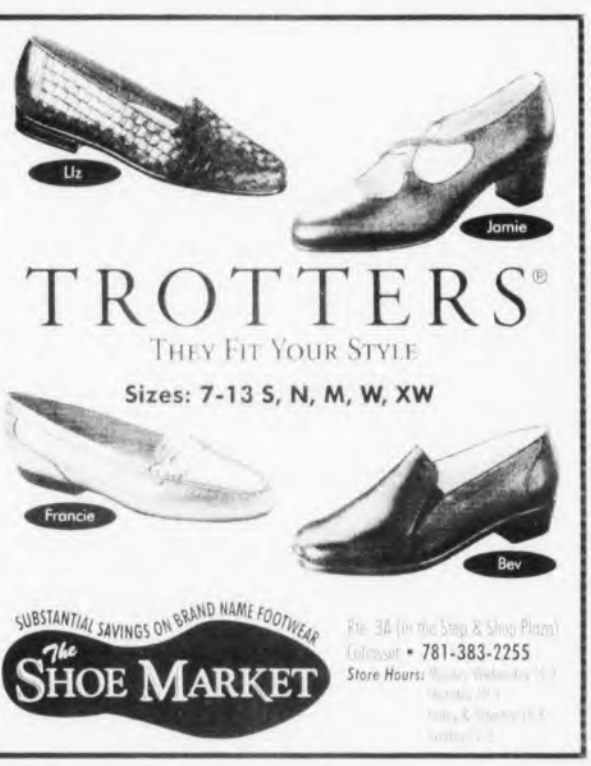
Hedlund said Massport is planning budget cuts from $40 million-$70 million. The authority also had to close the entire 2,500-space Terminal B parking facility due to new federal regulations prohibiting parking within 300 feet of terminals, which will result in $18 million in lost revenue.

Director of Aviation at Massport, Thomas Klinton believes a new runway at Logan will cut delays by one-third in doing so will improve air quality. Klinton said that in most recent studies the estimates are that a new runway and taxiway at Logan will remove 500 to 700 tons of pollution a year from the air.

Hull Town Manager, Phil Lemnios does not think this is reason enough to build the runway. With the runway Lemnios says the South Shore communities can expect four times more flights overhead. "If people are aggravated currently with airplane noise it could get four times worse," he said.

"The expansion didn't make sense before the Sept. 11 tragedies and now it's just absurd."

— William Golden, attorney for towns



In a recent press release, Klinton states the number of flights over the South Shore would not change as a result of building the new landing strip and that the noise should decrease as the airlines continue to introduce quieter planes at Logan.

Lemnios also warned about the economic impact to the three towns that the runway could have. Property values will go down about 10 percent, "this is a significant problem," he said.

Golden feels it's necessary for the town to continue their opposition to runway 14/32. Joining task forces and writing letters to Massport officials are two viable options to residents.

The propose runway has become a political football with democratic gubernatorial candidate Warren Tolman releasing a statement blasting Massport. In his statement Tolman argued that in light of the Sept. 11 events Logan should be focussing on its true mission, "moving planes and passengers in and out of Logan safely."

Massport has a special line on which residents can record noise complaints (617-567-3333) 24-hours a day. Those calling should give their names and addresses so each concern is recorded. Callers will receive a copy of the complaint.

Boy Scout Troop 28 is an original

Celebration planned Sunday

By Merle Brown
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Cohasset Boy Scout Troop 28, which is celebrating 85 years of boy scouting in Cohasset, will hold a reception at Kimball's By-The-Sea from 1-5 p.m., Sunday Oct. 21.

In 1916 the Rev. Stanley from the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset started a Boy Scout Troop in Cohasset. Being the first troop in the town it was Troop 1 of Cohasset. It held that distinction for many years, up until scouting was reorganized into councils which had many troops.

At that time there was a Troop 1 of Hingham that was older than the Cohasset troop by a few years. Therefore the Cohasset troop was renamed Troop 28 of Cohasset. Stanley was scoutmaster of the troop for several years with help from the parents of the scouts. After Stanley stepped down Arthur L. Lehr Jr. took over as scoutmaster. He remanded Scoutmaster until 1969, with a break during the Second World War.

In 1969 he started an Explorer Post and Nelson Pratt, one of Arthur's scouts, took over the troop. Nelson did not have any boys to be in scouting but it was said that his daughter went on more camping trips than some of the scouts did. Nelson stepped down in 1979 and David James took over the reins, until he moved out of town. Following David was Merle Brown, then John Pape, Earl Bestick, Howie Motanko and then Phil Lehr (Arthur's son and Eagle scout) who is the present scoutmaster.

Over the years there have been many a boy from Cohasset that was in Troop 28/1. A large amount of them have become Eagle Scouts. A position you never give up.

Troop 28 has a large collection of scouting memorabilia that will be on display for the afternoon.

Any one who was in the troop that did not get an invitation is asked to contact Arthur Lehr at 781-383-0388, or Merle Brown at 781-383-1625

New principal is enjoying her job

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Driving past the Deer Hill School you can start to hear the clamoring of children. Pulling up to the Osgood School the dull roar erupts into a cacophony of excited screams. It's clear that patience is a necessity to be the principal of a elementary school. Janet Sheehan loves every minute of it.

"Who wouldn't want to go and work in a beautiful community, with wonderful schools, and a great support network?" said Sheehan.

After teaching for 25 years in Milton, and being an assistant principal there for four years, Sheehan was ecstatic to be apart of the Cohasset community.

"When a system has this kind of reputation you want to be a part of it," Sheehan said.

At a recent school committee meeting, school Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey said Sheehan is a "good match" for the K-3 school. He extolled her interpersonal skills, experience in curriculum coordination and district-wide involvement in Milton.

Malvey said he also visited the Milton school system and talked with fellow administrators, teachers and parents all of who gave "nothing but outstanding recommendations for her." He also said Sheehan has a "marvelous sense of humor".

Sheehan describes herself as someone who is committed to her work and is willing to give the proverbial 110 percent. She believes that Cohasset is a learning community that is committed to its school system.

Providing support and being a resource for the teachers are two of the benefits of being a principal that Sheehan most enjoys. She loves being a cheerleader and celebrating the successes of both her teachers and students.

Working with younger children provides a unique aspect of schooling that most educators don't get to see. The children actually like coming to school.

"At this age every child is happy when they get off the bus. Their enthusiasm for learning is such a bonus," Sheehan said.

Sheehan works closely with the Osgood School Council in developing a school improvement plan, which is constantly being revised. She says the plan gives a focus and guides the school on how to train its teachers. The Osgood School currently offers more technology training to its teachers and is constantly working to try and improve communication skills.

She revels in the fact that the parents are so involved and are very willing to support and volunteer within the school, which is something Sheehan encourages.

Sheehan was one of five semi-finalists that met with an interview committee made up of two administrators, two Osgood School teachers, two school committee members, two parents and a third resident at-large. Malvey said Sheehan was the consensus pick as the candidate best suited for the job.

Sheehan replaced Marilee Cantelmo, who left after five years to pursue other educational opportunities. Sheehan is the second new principal to come on board in Cohasset in recent years. Michael Jones started last fall at Cohasset Middle High-School.

Sheehan holds a bachelor's degree from Westfield State College in education, and a master's degree from Lesley College. She began her teaching career as an elementary school teacher in Randolph. She and her husband Jack live in Scituate and have two daughters. Allison is a junior at Providence College, and Jennifer is a junior a Scituate High.

Open government

The Open Meeting Law is about as toothless as a regulation can get.

There is little punishment meted out by the District Attorney's Office, which no doubt views violations as a nuisance when compared with the real crime DA's face on a daily basis.

But nevertheless, the Open Meeting Law — which requires public business be conducted in public — is one of the few tools we journalists have to force town boards to be forthcoming and open at all times with a few limited exceptions. There are narrowly defined exemptions to the Open Meeting Law that deal with strategy related to litigation matters, some private personnel issues and collective bargaining.

As the public's eyes and ears at innumerable governmental meetings during the course of any given year, we take our job seriously. That's why we decided to file a formal complaint with the District Attorney's office over the "e-mail votes" conducted by the Sewer Commission.

To give you an idea of how "weak" the law is, the assistant district attorney we initially talked to over the telephone asked us why we wanted to pursue this. However, the DA's office did ultimately find for us and have asked the Sewer Commission not to conduct any more business over e-mail.

We're not trying to pick on the Sewer Commission unfairly. Commissioners didn't mean to break the law — the same way none of us do when we're caught going 40 in a 30 mph zone.

And as commissioners have said, they regret having skirted the law and were only trying to use e-mail to expedite matters in the case of the Cohasset Historical Society abatement request, or clean up some housekeeping issues due to an oversight when a couple of abatements were inadvertently excluded from a vote at another meeting.

Heck, we're for as much efficiency as possible in government. Just try sitting through a three-hour meeting on deadline with several more hours of writing ahead.

But there is nothing — absolutely nothing — that tears at the hearts of reporters more than closed government. We can't do our jobs if the hatches are battened down and not only that, you won't find out what's going on.

So we're glad the Sewer Commission goofed. It provided us with the opportunity to push the "e-mail" issue. With technology at our fingertips it can be all too easy to dash off a few e-mails in the name of expediency and deprive the public of open discussion.

In the end, however, it's not up to us, although we'll continue to knock on the door. You, as taxpayers and voters, need to insist that your government be open.

We recall covering another town years back when the issue of truck traffic was kept from the neighborhood, because the residents of the affected streets were bound to raise a ruckus if they found out trucks were being diverted onto their quiet roadway.

The town officials involved didn't want the word out until the decision was made, all in the name of efficiency.

So we implore you, our readers, to keep asking, keep pushing, even when it's unpopular. Yes, most elected officials are volunteers — but all the same, no one forces them to take on the oft-difficult responsibility.

Just remember about the folks in that other town that woke up one day surprised to discover 18-wheelers barreling down their residential street.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Stereotypes and AvalonBay

TO THE EDITOR:

Upon receiving my Oct. 11 edition of the Cohasset Mariner, my wife and I were taken aghast by the comments of School Superintendent Edward Malvey regarding the article on "AvalonBay", blatantly displayed on page 1 as a call out. After leafing through the paper for the continuation of the article, we immediately had a sense of relief that the words and thoughts of school committee members did not go unnoticed, thanks to your editorial on "Stereotypes".

As children, both my wife and I grew up in an era when mothers stayed home and fathers were the sole bread winners of the family. The reality was we had very little money but nobody noticed or cared about economic status anyway. This may be beyond Mr. Malvey's narrow minded scope of comprehension, but somehow we managed to make it through our developmental years without special needs classes or psychologists. In fact, we both worked very hard against these "so called" odds and proudly graduated near the top of our class. We hold college degrees, which we paid for ourselves holding 3-4 jobs at a time. In fact, us "poor" kids now own a home and our own successful business in Cohasset, no less.

We believe Mr. Malvey owes an apology to all Cohasset citizens, especially the children, wealthy or not, for his generalized and stereotypical statements. Sure there may be many future students who will require special needs services and we understand this is a legitimate fiscal responsibility and concern the school committee must address. However, for Mr. Malvey and others to sit there at this meeting and make assumptions about low-to-moderate income families, their children and their prospective needs dictates just how out of touch they are with reality. As you so aptly pointed out already, many of these so-called "low income" families include some of the finest, most intelligent, hard-working and honorable people our society and community has to offer. We must not allow people in highly visible, public roles (such as Mr. Malvey) continue to operate in a bubble and paint pictures of "these" families as people with children with emotional problems and learning disabilities — all unsubstantiated garbage based solely on a person's pre-conceived notion that how much money we earn directly correlates to our level of intelligence, our social status and our mental well-being.

Let us also not mask the actual issues at hand here. Cohasset needs affordable housing, however the sheer size and scope of the AvalonBay development appears as though it will be posing some real economic problems and environmental threats to the town. Perhaps instead of worrying about the "types of people" this project will attract and the impact their children will have on the school system and the community, we should be focusing on the debate of a Virginia-based developer whose own intentions are questionable at best. It is obvious that the goal of this developer is to by-pass local zoning laws and regulations all under the guise of "affordable housing" and the state's "Anti-Snob Zoning Act". The truth is they want to build something far too large and out-of-scale for the property and the "Anti-Snob Zoning Act" is the loophole to obtaining this. The more units built, the more money made.

This company is not here to help good, decent people afford a most basic need. They are here because of a loophole in Massachusetts law and they are here, up from Virginia, to make a huge amount of money.

Elitism charged

TO THE EDITOR:

I recently read an article addressing concerns about the proposed apartment complex in Cohasset and the proposed affordable units therein.

In this article, the Cohasset School Superintendent stated his opposition to the affordable housing and the effects it might have on the Cohasset School System.

I sincerely hope that his remarks do not reflect the policy of the Cohasset School System. They certainly suggest elitism.

Are all Cohasset students of equally-high intelligence and equally-high income?

I would hope that our school system would reflect an equal opportunity for all students.

Hidden agenda

TO THE EDITOR:

As a regular reader of The Mariner and a Cohasset resident, I was a bit surprised there was no mention in your Oct. 4 article of a possible connection between the Great Neck Ledge Preservation Group and what has been the long-standing concern of Beach Street residents over the attempt to develop the parcel of land located behind Town Hall and running along Beach Street.

Earlier this year, The Mariner reported that certain residents (you quoted DeGiacomo and Powers) were concerned about water run-off and the potential of flooding if this parcel were to be developed. I believe your earlier article also mentioned that the developer had plans for significant ledge blasting to achieve more direct access to the parcel. Having just read your Oct. 4 article, I presume I am expected to believe this newly formed "preservation group", which appears to include at least some of the Beach Street residents hoping to halt the development, has altruistic motives and historical preservation issues at heart.

I would like to know what is driving this interest in yet another regulation that may unintentionally affect us all. Initially, I thought I could say that I had no personal interest in this issue, other than to point out to The Mariner what may be the real motive behind this regulation. However, as a Forest Avenue resident who has been hoping for a sidewalk since moving here in 1986, I wonder whether the ledge along the stretch between North Main Street and Jerusalem Road will now become sacrosanct and need to be "preserved".

I would hope that if some people in Cohasset wish to limit development, why not do so in a straightforward, more thoughtful way — a way that will not levy restrictions that may fall perhaps unfairly on current homeowners or potential community projects.

Beechwood Street

TO THE EDITOR:

I have read with interest the article about Beechwood. I would like to call your attention the west end of Beechwood Street, although now partially submerged by the new reservoir, is now and always has been, for as long as it has been Beechwood Street, at its intersection with Union Street in Hingham.

At that intersection was an enormous, old-growth beech tree, which I always assumed was the reason for the street's name. As a teenager, growing up in South Hingham, before the Navy took it over, I admired that tree every time I rode past it on my bike, on my way to Sandy Beach in Cohasset to go swimming.

After the war, while the Navy was still occupying that land, I had the opportunity to go past the end of Beechwood Street to an address up Union Street. That beautiful tree was the principle landmark that I looked for! I was, obviously, disappointed to find that the Navy had taken it down, leaving just an empty space at the corner of a parking and turning area.

Public safety officials thanked

TO THE EDITOR

On Friday, Sept. 28, a fire erupted in my oven at 1:30 p.m.

First, police officer, Lisa Matos arrived with fire extinguisher in hand. Seconds later, Cohasset Fire Chief Roger Lincoln arrived just moments ahead of a fire truck with two professionals ready to do battle.

Because of their swift action, the fire was quickly extinguished and they remained on the scene with a representative of the gas company to turn off the gas.

I salute Officer Matos, Chief Lincoln and his colleagues for a job well done. We, the citizens of Cohasset, are indeed fortunate to have such wonderfully dedicated public safety officers - ready, able and committed to serve our community in the same way their brothers gave their lives in New York City, Sept. 11.

May God bless our public safety officials and may God bless America.

DA says 'no' to e-mail votes

To the Editor:

To the Cohasset Mariner

To the Cohasset Sewer Commission

This letter constitutes our office's response to the Open Meeting Law complaint received in connection with the Cohasset Sewer Commission's use of e-mail. After receipt of the complaint, this office contacted Gary Vanderweil, Chairman of the Cohasset Sewer Commission. In a timely and cooperative manner, Mr. Vanderweil provided this office with information relative to the issues raised in the complaint.

As you are aware, the complaint alleges that the Sewer Commission utilized e-mail to vote on matters prior to meetings held on June 5, 2001, and July 26, 2001. The issues which were the subject of e-mail correspondence related to (1) two abatement requests that had been inadvertently left out of a package prepared by the Commission Secretary prior to a June 5, 2001 meeting; and (2) a determination that the Commission would not be offering an abatement to the Historical Society property at 4 Elm St.

The Open Meeting Law mandates that "[a]ll meeting of a governmental body shall be open to the public" and that "no quorum of a governmental body shall meet in private for the purpose of deciding on or deliberating toward a decision on any matter, except as provided by this section. G.L.c.39, sec. 23B. Pursuant to sec. 23A of chapter 39, "meetings" covered by the Open Meeting Law include discussion or consideration by a quorum of "any public business or public policy matter over which the governmental body has supervision, control, jurisdiction or advisory power."

The Sewer Commission is a government body subject to the Open Meeting Law.

The Sewer Commission is a government body subject to the Open Meeting Law. The matters at issue — the issuance of abatement — related to the official duties of the Sewer Commission, and were thus a legitimate area of public scrutiny. This office has previously found that the Open Meeting Law is violated when e-mail conversations that relate to public business occur among a quorum of members of a governmental body. The use of e-mail communication for housekeeping matters, such as meeting scheduling and cancellations, would not be a violation of the Open Meeting Law. E-mail communications relating to public business should be avoided even where e-mails are sent on an individual basis, as individual e-mail conversations may reach a quorum of members without the knowledge of all participants.

We find that two unintentional violations of the Open Meeting Law occurred when the Commission (1) corresponded by e-mail on and around June 5, 2001, relative to two abatement requests that had been omitted from a previously compiled package, and (2) corresponded by e-mail on and around June 21, 2001, relative to the Commission's determination that it would not offer an abatement to the Historical Society property at 4 Elm St.

Remedy for Violations

Regarding the two abatement requests that were omitted from a previously compiled package, the votes conducted on those two abatement requests via e-mail are invalid. Thus, the Commission must, at its next open meeting, conduct a vote regarding those two abatements.

Regarding the 4 Elm St. abatement, it appears that the e-mail communications between members of the Commission resulted in the approval of a letter, which was sent to the Historical Society on June 24, 2001. Thus, the Commission can do nothing to remedy that violation.

This office finds that the violations of the Open Meeting Law were inadvertent and made in good faith. Because the violations were unintentional, we find that an appropriate additional remedy is for the Commission, at its next scheduled meeting, to address the issue of e-mail communications and to communicate to the public that the Commission will not utilize e-mail to discuss public business.

HEALTH NOTES

Water quality and wastewater capacity

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

One way the state parcels out aid for pollution and environmental restoration and repair is by obtaining data from volunteer groups, comparing it to the very small amount of data either the state or each town can afford to collect on its own, and establishing a list of priorities. Needless to say, there is never enough solid, high-quality data about pollution issues, and the more that can be collected, the better job the state can do in doling out money. Many times the system appears to be politicized with the noisiest getting the most, but almost invariably, if there's good data, the state will help out.

The issue of environmental restoration is for Cohasset, very important to the way the town will grow. Everyone is talking about AvalonBay, the 254-home development for which a comprehensive permit has been applied, thus negating any town bylaws regarding zoning. The town should, at the earliest opportunity, adopt a unified position about this project. Not to just oppose it, but decide what the town should do about it. One question from a Board of Health standpoint is wastewater capacity. The Sewer Department has just initiated a capacity study, voted at the last town meeting to see if the Central plant will have the capacity to sewer the 265 homes around Little Harbor. Findings so far are that there will be sufficient capacity for such an expansion, but very little more for future growth, and certainly none for Avalon Bay.

What has this to do with water quality? A lot. The state is unlikely to grant a permit for expansion of wastewater treatment capacity to the town unless it can be proved that the additional capacity will contribute toward cleaning up some sites of known pollution. One of these that the state has repeatedly mentioned is the shellfish beds in Little Harbor. The problem is that recent data shows low levels of bacterial pollution in that estuary, and budgetary considerations have prompted discontinuation of state data collection in Little Harbor. Thus, the way that the town can be assured of getting capacity it needs is to present good data that Little Harbor is subject to ever increasing pollution from wastewater from surrounding septic systems, and that sewering the homes around Little Harbor would solve the problem. These findings are supported by old data, but none that's up to date. The town could let a contract for someone to collect the data, but this would be very expensive. It would be better if volunteers could somehow collect the needed data.

The state is unlikely to grant a permit for expansion of wastewater treatment capacity unless the additional capacity will contribute toward cleaning up sites of pollution.

To this end, the Board of Health has initiated a volunteer water-quality monitoring program to collect water samples and have them analyzed during heavy rain events when pollution is known to be at its highest levels. The volunteers will be those citizens living nearest the sites to be sampled. The Board of Health will have its contract lab analyze the samples and the citizens around Little Harbor will pay for the sample analysis, thereby saving the town money and obtaining accurate, useful water quality data to support the need for a sewer around Little Harbor. This program will begin immediately, and will continue into next summer.

Food allergy

The Board of Health will also be sponsoring a food allergy program, focusing on peanut allergy, on Tuesday, October 23rd at 4:30 PM at the Joseph Osgood School. Lisa Stieb, RN, BSN, food allergy support group coordinator for the Asthma and Allergy Foundation, will present the program. The program is free of charge and the public, especially parents of young school-age children, are urged to attend.

For more information please call Judy Fitzsimmons, the Public Health Nurse at 781-383-2210.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

Village grant

To the Editor:

I was disgusted, but not surprised, to note Valerie Lipsett's expression of her anti-revitalization mindset via a letter to a state agency asking that the grant of $169,000 be rescinded on the grounds that considering Cohasset village improvements would be frivolous because of the destruction in Manhattan. Well, crocodile tears impress the naive, but the reality is that coping with the aftermath of the tragedy and coping with our other civic responsibilities need not be mutually exclusive.

Her letter infers that she speaks for the business community as well as for many residents. True, some merchants and residents are not enthusiastic, others are more far sighted. Some would be remain somnolent as the village runs down, like fungus on a decaying log. Future residents and surviving businesses can be grateful for constructive activists, such as those who worked to obtain the grant and who intend to follow up constructively.

To the Editor:

I would like to commend the children and adults who helped clean up Bassing Beach on Saturday, Oct. 13. Eleven bags of trash were hauled off as well as large pieces of refuse, including a chair, tire, camping equipment and several chunks of styrofoam. One piece of foam was a big as a twin mattress! The beach looks much nicer now that all that garbage is gone.

The girls who participated from Girl Scout Troop 4785 were Emily Bertovich, Courtney Culhane, Margaret Donze, Hilary Gaumer, Kelsea Hindley, Tori Lehr and Lucy Noble.

I'd also like to recognize a few older kids who came out to lend a hand. Thanks to Becca Lehr, Rob Lehr, Kevin Roach and Matt Farly.

Finally, a special thanks to the adults who volunteered, including Phil Lehr, Janeen Culhane, Jeff Donze, Rob Dennis and Howie Noble. A job well done!

Money promised for pavilion restoration

Senator Bob Hedlund met with Metropolitan District Commission (MDC) Commissioner David Balfour and received a commitment from the agency to undertake a $375,000 renovation of the Bernie King Pavilion on Nantasket Beach. The MDC will fund the project through its capital-spending budget for fiscal year 2002.

The restoration should be completed by the summer of 2002, coinciding with the 10th anniversary of the Friends of the Nantasket Reservation's formation. The Friends group organizes events at the Pavilion and raises money to pay for the summer series of "Concerts By The Sea."

Hedlund and Rep. Garrett Bradley have worked together to convince the MDC to make the Pavilion restoration a top priority.

In recent years the pavilion structure, which includes a well-used dance floor, has suffered from weather damage that threatens its continued use. The Bernie King Pavilion is the largest venue managed by the MDC after the Hatch Shell in Boston.

"It's long overdue," said Friends Board Member John Connell. "It's just badly, badly needed. Between the pigeons and the leaks in the roof – there are so many deterrents. And to date, the MDC has basically been putting Band-Aids on the problem. I think this funding represents the best-spent money the state could ever imagine."

The Bernie King Pavilion is home to musical events all summer long. On any given summer Sunday well over 500 senior citizens come to hear an array of big band, country and vocal performances during the summer concert season.

House approves sentencing reform

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, reports the House of Representatives passed legislation that will reform sentencing guidelines. This comprehensive bill ensures uniformity and accountability in criminal sentences, he said..

"This legislation maintains tough penalties on violent criminals and also allows for better uniformity in our justice system," Bradley said. "It ensures that any judge that departs from the guidelines must put her or his reasons in writing and that decision may be appealed by the prosecution or defense."

Under the House legislation passed, while judges maintain discretion, they are required to make written findings when they impose sentences that depart from the normal range. Repeat and violent offenders will receive tougher sentences. Defendants will receive intensive probation or parole supervision when they are in the community. The bill requires post release supervision for all incarcerated offenders who waive or are denied parole. This provision captures the class of people who would otherwise be released into the community from long prison sentences without any type of re-entry oversight, Bradley said.

Good old TV days

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

You may have missed it in all the frenzied coverage of Osama bin Laden, the Taliban and anthrax last week but one of the first icons of late night television passed on to the big Emmy in the sky.

Dagmar, who signed her checks Virginia Ruth Egnor, was the, shall we say, "suitably endowed" blond bombshell who graced the stage of NBC's "Broadway Open House," the first late night show, which eventually became "The Tonight Show" of Johnny Carson and Jay Leno.

For more than a year (1950-51), she co-starred on the show with two old vaudevillians, Jerry Lester three times a week and Morey Amsterdam twice a week, playing the role of a dumb blond. Her ample endowment (both of them) provided Lester with a running fire of leering remarks.

But at the same time, her hold on the attention of the growing number of TV watchers was such that she drew more than 2,000 fan letters a week.

For many of us, that was the first golden age of television when there were only four networks, NBC, ABC, CBS and Dumont, which gave us the first episode of Jackie Gleason's "The Honeymooners" as skit in its "Cavalcade of Stars" before it went under and bequeathed the show to CBS.

Television wasn't cheap, either, costing from $225 to $2,500 for a black and white set; color was still 15 years in the future. In fact, I saw my first television show (the Joe Louis-Jersey Joe Walcott fight in 1948) at Dick Key's house on West Street in an affluent section of Braintree.

It was the time of the "Toast of the Town," as what became "The Ed Sullivan Show" was the known, the first of which featured the unknown comedy team of Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis and was put together, along with several other acts for less than $200.

Eventually, "Old Stone Face," as Sullivan was known, featured the first American appearance of the Beatles and the first TV appearance of Elvis Presley, although only his top half appeared on camera to hide from the tender sensibilities of the viewing audience whatever he was doing with his hips at the time.

Television of 50 years ago was good at protecting us from the evils of anything that hinted of sex.

When Lucille Ball of the "I Love Lucy" show became pregnant, she decided that her TV character, Lucy Ricardo, should be in the family way also, so the nervous CBS network had a priest, a minister and a rabbi preview the "questionable" episode. They all had the same question.

"What's questionable about having a baby?"

Nevertheless, the network censors found it necessary to replace the word "pregnant" with "expectant."

Those were the days of the singing cowboy, too, with Roy Rogers running the Double R Bar ranch and, inexplicably, a diner in Mineral City at the same time while rounding up the baddies to the tune of "Happy Trails to You."

Of course, he had help from his palomino, Trigger; Dale Evans and her horse, Buttermilk; Bullet, the wonder dog; and his sidekick, Pat Brady (Pat Buttram) and Nellybelle, the trick jeep.

Kukla, Fran & Ollie brought their friends, Oliver J. Dragon and Beulah Witch, to us direct from the Kuklapolitan Playhouse; and NBC pioneered the 15-minute soap opera. "These Are My Children," which the trade magazine "TV World" panned: "There is no place on television for this type of program; a blank screen is preferable."

Actually, there was no such thing as a blank screen in the early days of television. There was always the ubiquitous "test pattern," a geometric design that enabled you to tune your set and keep you amused until Dagmar and her friends came on.

Low-income, elderly exemptions to CPA

The Community Preservation Act (CPA) was voted on and accepted at the April 7, 2001, Cohasset town election. This act adds a 1.5-percent surcharge to your real estate tax bill. However, there are exemptions to the surcharge. The first is a $100,000 residential exemption which exempts the first $100,000 of assessed value from the 1.5-percent surcharge. This is only on residential property and will be calculated automatically before the surcharge is billed.

The next two exemptions are for low-income and elderly families. If a family qualifies for this exemption, they will pay no CPA surcharge tax. To qualify for this exemption, your income must be below certain levels and you must file an application with the Assessors' office at Town Hall. The income qualification is from all sources and you must have income levels below what is shown in the table below. This surcharge will appear on the December tax bill.

In addition to the income requirement, applicants for both the low-income or elderly exemption must own and occupy the property as of Jan. 1, 2001, in order to be exempt for the current fiscal 2002 tax year. To qualify as elderly, the applicant must be 60 as of Jan. 1, 2001. Only the applicant must own and occupy the property as a domicile. However, all co-owners must meet the income standard. Taxpayers must apply annually for either exemption.

You must prove you qualify for the low-income or elderly exemption by application to the Assessors' office by March 30 or three months from the mailing of the actual (December) tax bill, whichever is later. Please call the Assessors' office at 781-383-4114 as soon as possible to get an application if you qualify for one of these two exemptions.

Tensions grow on Lamberts Lane

cerned that increased social functions and the club's dining facilities create more traffic than is needed. They feel that the social memberships and the use of the golf memberships by family members have significantly increased the number of people driving on the road. In June, the zoning board denied the residents' appeal finding that the accessory activities at the club do not violate the zoning bylaw but was careful to point out that the ruling did not give the club "free rein to do anything it wants," stated Ben Lacy, who wrote the decision.

This past July, four Lamberts Lane residents appeared before selectmen to request temporary speed bumps be placed on the narrow but busy street. The selectmen denied their request saying that it would create a precedent.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said speed bumps are not an option. "Speed bumps are for parking lots and private driveways, this is a town road. We're not for speed bumps." Noonan went on to explain that the police have tried to increase their patrols around the road but attempts at catching people speeding have been largely unsuccessful.

The residents are undeterred and determined to create a safer road. "I have a radar gun and I've clocked people at 40mph. That's not safe," Zeven said.

However, the golf club is working in conjunction with the residents on this issue.

Golf club president Frank Gaul said the club is trying to educate its members and employees about safety issues. Gaul said he'd love to see more enforcement from the police department. In the golf club's newsletter as well as on receipts there's a reminder for members and guests to watch their speed while entering and leaving the club.

Martinez thinks the club is doing a satisfactory job in addressing the speeding issue. "They've been making a good effort to alert their members about the speed limit. We'd like to maintain a spirit of cooperation with the golf course on this issue," she said.

However, Zeven feels they could be doing more. "I don't think the golf club is interested in really resolving these issues. We just want the golf club to show us courtesy and respect for us and our kids," he said.

Zeven feels another option to ease the traffic problem would be to open Golf Club Road, at least for deliveries. Golf Club Road runs through the golf course and empties on to North Main Street. However, Gaul balks at this request saying it is not a viable option. "It runs through the golf course. Traffic would entirely disrupt the course. Opening up the road is not possible," he said.

'Ugly parking spaces'

The other issue at hand is the unscreened expanded parking lot. The residents are annoyed that they have to look at "ugly parking spaces".

Martinez feels that the golf club gave the residents the impression it was going to put up screening but never did. Martinez wonders if they hadn't called a meeting with the golf club if the issues ever would have been addressed. "They started off being neighborly but now we wonder if they'll ever get anything done," she said.

Zeven feels the club was trying to "weasel its way" out of the zoning regulations. Zeven claims the club has told the residents it is out of money and is working on its budget to resolve this problem.

Zeven feels it's odd that a golf club of its stature doesn't have enough money to help be a better neighbor.

Gaul says that the club will have a meeting later on this fall to try and create a plan. He said implementation of the plan would begin next spring at the earliest. "I'm optimistic that the screening issue will be resolved," he said.

Martinez said there's nothing the residents can do now but wait. She's looking forward to a meeting with the club in December when she hopes these issues will be resolved. She says the residents have been led to believe the club would find the money to do the screening and are disappointed that the golf club hasn't made a concerted effort to do that. However, Martinez said "at this point we'd like to believe the golf club and give them the opportunity to fix the problem."

Transfer station rejected

tion for any solid waste use, given drinking water and water protection issues, the wetlands and the proximity of Trustees of Reservations parkland," the board stated.

Selectmen stated it had the backing of Town Meeting in not wanting to see any future trash facilities at the site. Town Meeting voted by a two-thirds majority to rezone the parcel as a "technology business" that does not include solid waste uses including transfer stations. The change in zoning was voted at the March 2000 annual Town Meeting and later, approved by the Attorney General. However to protect his development rights, Barry filed a "Form A" with the Planning Board prior to the Town Meeting, which may have grandfathered his ability to operate a transfer station at the site.

Selectmen said they were mindful of the long regulatory struggle with CHL — one "they did not want to condemn the town to relive again should similar uses be allowed there." Over the years the town and CHL have been embroiled in a total of seven lawsuits over environmental issues regarding the landfill. Legal appeals are still pending on two lawsuits; one over the validity of a special permit to operate the landfill and the other concerns the standard for drainage of surface water into the watershed.

Selectmen were not swayed to support the transfer station proposal by Barry's generosity. He recently offered to donate two acres of land off Route 3A near Sunrise Assisted Living for the proposed new police station, saving the town an estimated $500,000. According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, Barry didn't ask for any special consideration when he made the offer of land to the town. Voters at the Nov. 5 Special Town meeting will decide whether to accept the two-acre gift.

"This is simply the wrong location for any solid waste use."
— Board of Selectmen

In a telephone interview this week, Barry said there were no strings attached to the offer.

"That offer is on the table no matter what," said Barry, a former police officer in Newton. "I have a soft spot for police departments. I'm a law and order man."

Barry's efforts to open a 1,800-ton per-day transfer station off Route 18 in Abington met with stiff opposition. The Board of Health in that town voted in August to rescind the site assignment. Barry has appealed that decision to Suffolk Superior Court. His 299-ton per-day Cohasset proposal is considerably smaller and would not include any household trash.

Barry said this week the proposed Cohasset facility would be an adjunct to his Graham Waste – which is at the site of the former Wintergarden skating rink – and handle processing the construction and demolition debris from that business.

"It would strictly be a transfer station for Graham Waste Services, a company based in Cohasset," he said. "It's a small, family-run operation."

Selectmen said in their letter that Barry made it clear the transfer station was a request and would not stand in the way of the town finalizing a settlement banning all solid waste uses, including transfer stations, at the CHL property by deed restriction.

But Barry said he is not going to give up his rights to operate a transfer station at the site. However, he isn't totally committed to it either.

"I'm not 100 percent committed," he said. "But I'm not a quitter. I'm not ready to lie down yet. I'll probably give it a shot."

Initiating the process involves filing for a permit with the state Department of Environmental Protection.

Water Commission Chairman John McNabb, who was also involved as a private consultant in opposing Barry's Abington transfer station proposal, said traffic issues have changed at the site. There is a new medical building on Crocker Lane, Cohasset Collision is nearby and Hingham Lumber plans to relocate near Cohasset Collision. He also said run off from trucks at transfer stations can pose an environmental danger to the watershed and dust from processing debris can also be a hazard.

Anchor planned for Govt. Island

anchor will add to the decor of the island, it's a good spot for it." He added the rest of the committee seemed to be in agreement that it was a good addition.

Government Island which also includes Lightkeepers' Residence and the templates used when the second Minot Light was being built, is one of the most historic areas in town and is listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

Herb Jason has a storied history at Government Island. In his 70 years as a lobsterman, Jason rounded Minot Ledge Lighthouse thousands of times and reflected during each trip about the two men who lost their lives "keeping a good light" 150 years ago. Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson manned the first, metal structured lighthouse over dangerous Minot Ledge. During a nor'easter on the poorly constructed lighthouse which was know to sway two feet of center, back and forth in the Atlantic swells succumbed to the waves, taking both men. A letter in a bottle discovered after the tragedy revealed that the men knew the structure would not make it through the night.

Nearly a century and a half later, the compelling story would motivate Jason to push for a monument to honor the men.

Ledge, promoting senior housing

Harrington said. After considerable debate at a recent meeting, selectmen decided to leave the restriction at 20 and allow Town Meeting to adjust the number downward if voters are so inclined.

At the same time, the town looks to limiting growth, it wants to encourage the development of affordable housing for senior citizens, many of whom are being priced out of town as property taxes rise.

Selectman Sullivan was particularly vocal in his opposition to relaxing zoning restrictions for senior housing. He was concerned about homeowners who expect their neighborhood to remain a certain way.

"This would open Pandora's Box," he said.

But Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the zoning change was necessary to create opportunities for senior housing that the town so desperately needs.

Moore, the Planning Board chairman, said the three issues are bound to spark lively debate at Wednesday's public hearing. He said the articles "came up at the last minute" and personally feels the special Town Meeting — which traditionally focuses on financial matters and issues with a "timeliness to them"— is not the appropriate forum to tackle zoning issues.

Over the years, Moore has consistently taken the position that zoning should be reserved for the annual Town Meeting.

Anthrax scare reaches Cohasset

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Police Department has a copy of the revised Anthrax Threat Protocol from the State Fire Marshall's office. It's dated April 27, 2000 and replaces the prior protocol issued in December 1998.

The five-page document – the contents of which are proprietary and not for dissemination outside public safety agencies – hasn't exactly sat on the shelf gathering dust. But it hasn't exactly been used a lot either.

That was until 6:10 p.m., Sunday when Cohasset became one of some 60 municipalities across the state with an Anthrax scare.

At 6:10 p.m. Sunday, Cohasset became one of some 60 municipalities across the state with an Anthrax scare.

This small town of 7,000 people has now been welcomed into the new world of bio-terrorism which followed in the aftermath of Sept. 11, when hijackers commandeered commercial airliners and flew them into the World Trade Center towers and Pentagon.

The call came in at 6:02 p.m., Sunday from a resident of Surry Drive who discovered a white, powdery substance while going through the mail. The resident was unsure if the white powder had leaked from a piece of mail or was spread onto the letters.

Following protocol, the police under the direction of the fire department established a safety zone around the mailbox and adjoining homes. All persons exposed to the powder, including the three residents of the Surry Drive home were briefly quarantined, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

A regional hazardous materials unit, based in Bourne, dressed in protective suits and wearing self-contained breathing apparatus removed the white powder from the home, samples of which were submitted to the state Department of Health for testing. The results were expected within 72 hours.

But Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said Tuesday a technician from the DPH called late Monday to say there wasn't enough residue to conduct a test. Lincoln said he has contacted officials at the state Fire Marshal's office to see if they want to try to obtain another sample from the mail and the box the mail was in. Those items are sealed in plastic bags and locked in a locker at the fire station.

Lincoln said no one who was exposed to the unidentified substance has come down with any symptoms. However, he is not happy with news from DPH.

"It's very unsettling and I intend to get to the bottom if it," he said.

After Sunday's incident, the FBI was notified and Cohasset police detectives are also conducting an investigation.

Revitalization effort being fine tuned

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation held a final workshop before the Nov. 5 special Town Meeting in order to iron out details about the village revitalization project. Issues discussed were lighting fixtures, sidewalks, parking spaces and general streetscape conditions.

Dean Rizzo, the executive director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private corporation working in conjunction with the village revitalization task force, outlined the project's overall goals.

The goals included:

- Balancing the environment for vehicles and pedestrians
- Providing clarity and ease of movement
- Improving visual environment
- Slowing traffic as an economic strategy

The improvements would be centered around four areas, Elm Street, Ripley Road, Depot Court, and the town parking lot. While these ideas have been talked about for months, some new concepts surfaced.

A proposed two-story garage in place of the teen center in the town lot drew the most criticism. While Rizzo emphasized this was a merely an idea and something that would not be taken in front of special town meeting residents quickly shot it down. One disgruntled resident even said, "Why are we even talking about this. All your doing is irritating people, move on to something else."

For the most part Cohasset residents embraced the proposed plans. Roger Whitley, of Cedar Lane, a library trustee, said he supports most the ideas. "I am in favor of doing this project," Whitley said. He did mention he would like to see bike paths put in connecting the new library to the schools for children to be able to have easy access to the library.

June Hubbard of Beach Street, was a little less enthused. "Some of the ideas we have to worry about cost which I don't think people are taking into consideration," she said. However, Hubbard does like the fact that if one is interested in the project they have an outlet to express their ideas and have them heard as was the case at Thursday's forum.

Another suggested plan was that of putting the utilities lines of the village underground. To generate revenue for this idea, a 2 percent surcharge on all residential and business utility bills would be added for a designated amount of time.

Surveys were passed out at the meeting and Rizzo encouraged the residents to fill them out with any suggestions they may have. The questions ranged from asking residents if they supported redesign projects to asking them to rate sidewalk surface material and light fixtures in order of preference.

Rizzo felt the workshop went well and the residents gave him "a lot of good feedback". He said the next step is to review all the comments from the residents as well as the suggestions from the Planning Board and refine the presentations for special Town Meeting. The plan is taken before the special Town Meeting in order to gain its endorsement Rizzo said.

Work on the village could start by the end of 2002, Rizzo said. He said the estimated $2-1/4 million revitalization project could be paid for with no direct cost to Cohasset taxpayers. This does not include putting the utility lines underground. The $1.5 million Public Works Economic Development Grant along with the $169,000 transportation enhancement grant, which will be used for the sidewalk on South Main Street in front of St. Stephen's Church, will pick up most of the tab. The MBTA will pay to reconstruct the town parking lot and the Ripley Road intersection by the South Shore Art Center in the village as part of the Greenbush train restoration project.

That brings the total to approximately $2.2 million for various village improvements. Rizzo estimated that to complete all construction could range from $1.7 million (all concrete sidewalks) to $2.4 million (all brick sidewalks).

The Rev. Peter Hobart subject of new biography

By David Wadsworth
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

A new biography, written by longtime Cohasset resident and a descendant of early Hingham families Edward Franklin Ripley, portrays the life of the Rev. Peter Hobart, one of the principal founders of the settlement of Hingham in Massachusetts Bay Colony.

Emigrating from Hingham, Norfolk County, England in 1634, Hobart brought with him a group of East Anglian families who formed his parish in England. Arriving first in Charlestown, the group of parishioners soon settled in the small village known as "Bare Cove," and they changed its name to match that of their old world community. Hobart was a Puritan minister, of the dissident wing, who increasingly were being persecuted for their opposition to some of the practices in the church to which they strongly objected. At Hingham, Massachusetts Bay, they joined a smaller group of settlers already there from England's west counties.

The Hingham Puritans soon dominated the life and the government of the new settlement, and increasingly found themselves persecuted by the more conservative Colonial government at Boston, as they previously had been by the royal government in England.

The book recounts the struggles, some victories and some not victorious, of Hobart and his flock as they fought to preserve their beliefs, and their freedoms, in the small but influential settlement at Hingham. Political and theological struggles with Gov. John Winthrop's Colonial administration in Boston marked Hobart's career in Hingham, and at times reached the level of mutual bitterness. Hobart, as it might be said, "won a few and lost a few."

At that time, Cohasset was Hingham's eastern section, part of the town's common land, not yet divided up or populated and used for grazing of farm animals and harvesting of salt hay. Later, by 1670, the land of Cohasset was needed to provide for the growing population of Hingham. It was duly surveyed, divided into individual parcels, and conveyed to a combination of first- and second-generation settlers. In the land division, the East Anglia method was followed: those of highest social and economic order received the most land, those of lowest social and economic order received the least. Thus was the social hierarchy preserved as it had existed before they left England, and had been preserved in the original laying out of farms and homesteads in the new settlement at Hingham in the Massachusetts Bay Colony. By about 1722 when the new settlement at Cohasset, sometimes referred to as "Little Hingham," and then as Hingham's Second Parish and Second Precinct, chose its own minister for its own parish it appears to have been more than mere coincidence that its choice was the Rev. Peter Hobart's eminent Harvard-educated grandson, the Rev. Nehemiah Hobart. In that choice, the descendants of East Anglian Puritans in Hingham sought to solidify the allegiance of the new parish in their eastern section.

Today's 1747 Meetinghouse on Cohasset Common is a direct descendant of Hobart's and Hingham's original First Parish, now called "The Old Ship." In a community where religious parish and secular precinct government were closely related, the Colonial meetinghouse was the center of both the religious and governmental activity of its citizens. As for the Rev. Peter Hobart himself, he had been born in 1604, had ministered to the parish of St. Andrews in Hingham, Norfolk, England, became the first permanent clergyman in the new town of Hingham, Massachusetts Bay, and died in 1678, just as the new settlement at Cohasset was beginning.

"Shepherd In the Wilderness" is a well-documented analysis of an early Colonial settlement in the growing Puritan Commonwealth at Massachusetts Bay, and a fascinating look at one of its leading citizens.

This important new book is available in the Paul Pratt Memorial Library in Cohasset, and is scheduled to have its second printing by the University Press of America.

Cafeteria workers form new union

The Cohasset school cafeteria workers have unionized.

The nine eligible workers petitioned the Labor Relations Commissioners to form a union. An election was held on Sept. 25 and there was a unanimous vote of food service personnel to unionize.

All full-time and part-time cafeteria workers employed by the Cohasset School Department, excluding all managerial and casual employees, will be represented by the Massachusetts Laborers' District Council of the Laborers' International Union of North America.

Supt. Edward Malvey said that now the school district has to wait for the certified vote from the Labor Relations Commission. After the union organizes with the food service workers, he'll meet with them, though nothing is in the works yet.

The purpose of joining a union would be the ability to conduct collective bargaining over issues such as wages, working hours or and other conditions having to do with employment.

MCAS scores up, state says

Local results in two weeks

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

High school students around the state breathed a sigh of relief as this years MCAS scores were released.

Two-thirds of the students passed the test, according to published reports. This year the stakes were higher, members of the 2003 class must pass the test in order to be eligible for a high-school diploma. This marked the first year that students were required to pass the test in order to graduate.

District-by-district results — including those from Cohasset students — are expected in two weeks.

Eighty-two percent of 10th graders passed the English part of the exam, up from 66 percent from last year. On the math section, 75 percent of 10th graders passed, up from 55 percent from last year.

MCAS, which stand for Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System, is supposed to help school districts align their curriculum so that certain subject matter is covered at a particular grade level no matter what town the student lives in.

The MCAS have come under fire by the Massachusetts Association of School Committees that voted to eliminate linking the "high-stakes" test to graduation. The association will lobby the legislature to change the requirement.

Supt. Edward Malvey has said that while he supports using the MCAS to improve curriculum requirements he is against the graduation requirement.

"I don't think there should be one test to determine a youngster's future out of high school," Malvey said. He said he is an advocate of multiple ways to assess students.

Last year Cohasset students did very well in the test. In the fourth grade the percentages of students, who scored proficient or advanced, increased in all areas, including English and the language arts, math, and science and technology. Those students in eighth-grade last year also showed significant improvement with almost 20 percent more students in the proficient and advanced categories. In grade 10 last year there was a slight dip in English proficiency but overall the sophomores showed improvement.

It will be interesting to see how this years results stack up.

MCAS exams include short answer and essay questions as well as multiple choice. Students are bunched into four categories after taking the test:

- Failing - Students at this level demonstrate a minimal understanding of subject matter and do not solve simple problems.
- Needs Improvement- Students at this level demonstrate a partial understanding of subject matter and solve a wide variety of problems.
- Proficient - Students at this level demonstrate a solid understanding of challenging subject matter and solve a wide variety of problems.
- Advanced - Students at this level demonstrate a comprehensive and in-depth understanding of rigorous subject matter and provide sophisticated solutions to complex problems.

This is the season when the "bones" of the garden are most visible and the design is most evident. This slide presentation will demonstrate that even under a blanket of snow the off season garden can be enticing.

'Playathon' benefit

On Saturday, Oct. 27, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., at the First Parish Church, music students from all over the South Shore will be sharing their talents to benefit a good cause—the homeless shelters at Pine Street Inn and Rosie's Place in Boston.

Sponsored by the South Shore Music Teachers Association, a professional organization of independent music teachers, this is the second annual "playathon" to be held on the South Shore. Last year's event raised more than $3,000, all of which was sent to the two shelters.

More than 70 students representing the studios of 10 teachers, are planning to get pledges in advance and will perform, in costume, throughout the day. At the same time, First Parish will hold its annual Harvest Fair, complete with food, children's activities and great buys. The public is invited to both the Halloween Playathon and the Harvest Fair, free of charge.

Independent and adventurous, Baldrige graduated from Vassar and went off to her first job as assistant to Evangeline Bruce, wife of the American Ambassador to France. This was the beginning of a long and glamorous career, which included working with Clare Booth Luce in Rome and with Jacqueline Kennedy as the social secretary for the White House. Baldrige also became the first woman executive for Tiffany & Co. and founded Letitia Baldrige Enterprises. Stars of the Week

Matt Bilodeau

The senior center-midfielder for the boys soccer team appears to finally be feeling good after suffering with back pain for a good portion of the season— something that's clearly had a lot to do with the Skippers strong stretch run. Bilodeau had a goal and an assist in both of the Skippers wins over the last week.

Boys rolling into post-season

Soccer squad peaking and getting healthy at right time

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Realistically, the Cohasset boys know that their dreams of a South Shore League championship are no longer viable. Norton (9-0-2) and Norwell (10-1-1) will likely be playing for that distinction on Friday afternoon in Norton.

So now it becomes a matter of the Skippers (9-2-1 in league, 10-3-1 overall) preparing for the state tourney. The primary focus, therefore, has now shifted to honing the overall game and securing a high seeding—in that order.

This being the case, coach Dave Nigro has got to feeling pretty good right about now, his team coming off two of its more dominant performances of the season.

On Saturday, the Skippers handed Scituate just its third loss of the season, scoring three goals on the vaunted Sailors defense, and dominating territorially for much of the game. Up until Thursday's 2-0 loss against unbeaten powerhouse Duxbury, the Sailors had not surrendered more than one goal in any game this season.

"That was probably our best overall performance of the year," said Nigro. "We really took it to a very solid team for a lot of the game."

Field hockey team keeps hope alive

Pinkus goal keeps Lady Skippers in playoff hunt

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset field hockey team continued its impressive late season run with a 1-0 win over league rival Norwell on Monday.

With the victory, the Lady Skippers improved to 4-7-4 on the season overall and stayed alive in the playoff hunt. Of course, they must win all three of their remaining games to get in, but coach Deb Bostwick couldn't be more thrilled with how far her team has come.

The veteran coach candidly admits that she had pretty much dismissed the playoffs as a possibility a few weeks ago when her team's record stood at 1-4-3.

"Things are definitely getting interesting," noted Bostwick, who's team has gone 3-3-1 in the last seven games. "We're making steady progress and the girls are feeling good about themselves."

The Cohasset girls have Hull, Mashpee and Silver Lake left on their schedule, three teams they beat previously, so Bostwick feels good about their chances for pulling off the necessary clean sweep, particularly given the way it's been playing of late.

"I definitely feel like we have a chance right now," said Bostwick, referring to a tourney berth.

Cohasset sophomore Danielle Pinkus scored the game's only goal on Monday at 16:48 of the first period off a nice corner hit by junior captain Heather Peraino.

The Skippers pretty much dominated this contest from the outset, as indicated by their seven first half corners.

"We really did a nice job of keeping the pressure on," said Bostwick. "Our forwards and midfielders did a nice job of driving."

Specifically lauded by the coach for their efforts were first year varsity players Jessie Guild and Kelly Hurley, along with goalie Sara Genovese, who made four saves to record her second shutout of the season.

"We're getting some real strong play from a lot of our newer players like Jessie and Kelly right now, and that's what's helping to make us a better team down the stretch," continued the coach.

"Early in the year, we were being carried by our core players like Heather (Peraino) and Abby (Coakley), and a few other veterans, but we've become so much more of a true team over the last few weeks."

Among the names cited most often by Bostwick in her stream of plaudits these days are senior sweeper Jackie Hoines, senior fullback Suzanne Lynner, senior forward Allison Scott, junior defender Sarah Dennis, sophomore Rachel Doyle and, of course, junior goalie Genovese.

The Lady Skippers also gave Harwich (11-0-3) all they could handle in a 3-0 loss on Tuesday. The Rough Ryders capitalized on three early Cohasset mistakes to score their goals, but the Skippers shut them down from there, and even mounted a few strong rushes into Harwich's end in the second half—something they never came close to in the Wild tie ends losing streak

Last minute Weber goal helps keep girls in post-season hunt

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset girls soccer team overcame two consecutive losses to take a tie against Carver, 1-1. And it was a wild one.

Cohasset had been put away by unbeaten first place Abington last Thursday and Scituate took down the Lady Skippers this past Saturday. The two losses stopped the momentum the Lady Skippers had been building, but the girls regained some of their confidence last Monday against Carver.

"Look at the experience they are getting: they are winning, they are losing, and they are bouncing back."

Cohasset girls soccer coach Deb Beal, referring to her strong core of underclass players.

The teams were tied at zero at halftime, thanks in large part to sophomore sweeper Holly Graham. Graham continually denied Carver's speedy forwards with decisive clears to the midfield.

"She is under constant fire," said fourth year coach Deb Beal. "But she is staying focused."

Flynn wins SMSA Optimist championship

After a weekend of wild weather that forced the cancellation of the Hingham Yacht Club Fall Blast, the 2001 sailing season came to an end for Andrew Flynn, 14, of Cohasset.

Given all of his successes, Andrew, an Optimist sailor who sails for the Wild Harbor Yacht Club in North Falmouth, will some day look back on the summer of 2001 with pride and pleasure.

Andrew has been sailing Optimist Dinghys for the past five years and was very much looking forward to a summer of competitive sailing and was up to the challenge. His goal this year was to win the Southern Massachusetts Sailing Association Optimist Championship. For the first time in

Golf team wraps up 'learning' season

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

What's the last thing you'd expect to hear from the coach of a team who just lost back-to-back matches by a combined score of 17-1 to drop his team's record to 2-8-1?

How about this?

"I really wish there were a few more weeks in this season," said Cohasset golf coach Torin Sweeney of the campaign that will end today with the South Shore League match at Squirrel Run in Plymouth.

The ever-ebullient coach elucidates:

"We entered this season with a lot of really inexperienced players, so it was tough to have a lot of expectations. But a lot of these kids have really come on in the last few weeks. I'd like to see what they'd do going up against a few of the teams in our league one more time."

On Monday, the Skippers fell 8-1 to four time defending SSL champ Norwell (9-2)— who with a win over Norton Tuesday assured itself at least a share of that title for a fifth straight season— at Norwell's home Scituate Country Club course.

Cohasset's number one golfer, freshman D.J. Silvia, continued his season long solid play with a round of 39. Unfortunately, this was no match for the one under 34 shot by Norwell's two-time defending state individual champion Ben Spitz. It was enough, however, to qualify the frosh for the state tourney in individual play this Monday at the Falmouth Country Club. The criteria for individual qualification for the state tourney is a minimum of 50 percent of the nine-hole rounds on the season being within four strokes of par.

"This was a nice achievement for DJ," noted Sweeney. "The big thing with his game is consistency, and that's what helped get him in here."

Team captain Bill Moody also played well out of the second spot on Monday, shooting a 42. However, he was bested by the 40 fired by Norwell's Max Schenkein.

The lone Cohasset point was recorded by number five player Greg O'Brien, who shot a 49 out of the sixth spot to earn the win.

The final tally in last Thursday's 9-0 loss to Norton is misleading, as each of the six head-to-head matches weren't even determined until the ninth and final hole.

"Yeah, that was about as close as any 9-0 match could be," verified Sweeney. "You're talking about three or four shots that could have turned this thing completely around."

So with this season all but over, how does Sweeney feel about the future?

"We had a lot of inexperienced players come a long way this season," he offered. "I'll be real interested to see how they come back next season. If they commit themselves to improvement in the off-season, I can see us making a nice step up next season."

Wild tie ends losing streak

second half four minutes in, when the Crusader attack finally pushed one through junior goalkeeper Kelly Holway.

Beal noted that the goal seemed to deflate her team, and it was not until the final minutes of the game that the team seemed to regain its competitive edge.

"They played out of their minds the last five to eight minutes," she observed.

With just 90 seconds to play, senior midfielder Maggie O'Neill blasted a shot from way outside the 18 yard box. The shot appeared to bounce off the Carver keeper's head, as junior attacker Molly Flanagan tapped the ball in.

However, amid much disagreement from the sidelines and hometown crowd, the refs ruled that the goalie had possession.

A mere minute later, junior Julie Lordan delivered a looping cross towards the net, which sophomore forward Gillian Weber booted home for the equalizer.

The tie pulled Cohasset's record to 2-7-3, while Carver maintained its spot in the SSL cellar at 1-7-2.

Prior to this more-exciting-than-average-match-up, Cohasset was dismantled by two local foes.

Abington defeated Cohasset 3-0 for the second straight time this season, and Scituate was all over their hosts, 5-0.

"We weren't as aggressive as we should have been," affirmed Beal. "We came out flat, and we came out slow. We weren't first to the ball. You have to possess the ball to score, and we didn't do that."

The losses were particularly crushing to Cohasset's steadily improving record. After starting the season 0-4, Cohasset won or tied four out of their next five games to pull to 2-5-2. The final game in that span was perhaps the most impressive, a 2-2 tie of Norton, after the Lady Lancers had beaten Cohasset by three goals earlier in the season.

The only loss in the five game series was a 3-2 decision to Mashpee, for which Cohasset was missing four starters.

In the optimistic eyes of coach Beal, this rollercoaster of a season has provided some much needed seasoning for the younger players.

"Look at the experience they are getting: they are winning, they are losing, and they are bouncing back," offered the head coach, knowing that she has a core of underclassmen who will be very good in the coming years.

Cohasset will have some winnable games coming up, and the playoffs are not mathematically out of the question. Though it may be too early to set their sites too high, Beal hopes to continue to improve her team one game at a time.

scoring 16 minutes in by converting on a penalty kick.

Robert Hickey doubled the lead eight minutes later, heading home a well served corner from Bilodeau.

Scituate built a little momentum after striker Matt Story scored to make it 2-1 early in the second half, but Cohasset's D weathered that brief reversal, and Tim Baird pretty much iced the game with five minutes remaining, finishing on a pretty feed from Kurt Kahn.

Monday's 4-2 win on the road against Carver was more of the same, with the Skippers dominating more on the field than the scoreboard wound up indicating.

First half Cohasset tallies by Evan Pestone and senior Jay Bertovich (his first varsity goal) were each countered by the host Crusaders to send the game into the half tied at 2-2. Of course, it bares mentioning that both of Carver's goals came with some controversy—the first on a penalty kick awarded for contact near the top corner of the box (a spot on fouls where refs seldom award a PK), the second on the rebound of a high shot that caromed off the upper bar of the football field goal post that framed the net. The Skippers stopped, anticipating the awarding of a goal kick, but the refs allowed play to continue.

The Skippers continued to pour it on their hosts in the second half, and this time there were no flukes to disrupt their flow.

Bilodeau finished off a flurry in front of the Carver net eight minutes in to give the Skippers the lead for good at 3-2.

The prettiest goal of the afternoon came inside 10 minutes when Bilodeau lofted a free kick from 25 yards out across the goal mouth to Tim Baird who one timed it out of the air back into the opposite corner.

Bilodeau, who was slowed through much of the early part of the season by a bad back, reports that he is just about 100 percent back to where he wants to be, something that's clearly evidenced by his play of late. At center-midfield, the offense flows through the captain. So, when he's on, the Skippers level of play seems elevated across the board.

"Bilodeau is the guy who makes it go for them," appraised Scituate head coach Jim Willis, following his team's match-up with the Skippers on Saturday. "He's such a smart player and he just makes decisions so quickly. He gets rid of the ball before anyone has a chance to react, and he almost always does something good with it."

Bilodeau's return to health has allowed Nigro to keep multi-talented Greg O'Connell at sweeper the majority of the time. The Cohasset coach had been moving O'Connell up front quite a bit to jump start the offense, but finds that is something he's not having to do as much these days.

Sophomore Jesse Brewer, stepping in as the number one keeper, also performed well in his first few varsity starts this week, according to coach Nigro, playing much more aggressively than one might expect from a player with his relatively limited experience.

"Top to bottom, those last two games were two of our nicer outings of the year," said Nigro. "We're as healthy as we've been in a while right now and we're playing well together. Things seem to be coming together."

Of course, after advancing to semifinals of the South Sectionals a year ago, where the Skippers lost a 2-1 heartbreaker to Norwell, Nigro knows many things must fall just right in the post-season. Though he makes no bones about expressing his pleasure for the way his team has come together of late, there is no way he's going to offer up any predictions.

"The tourney's a whole different proposition than the regular season," he noted. "Teams all respond differently. It brings out the best in some teams and the worst in others."

initial go-round three weeks ago. Geneovese again played a big role in keeping things respectable, coming up with 18 stops between the pipes.

The girls lost a heartbreaker on the road to second place Carver (5-1 in league, 11-2 overall) on Saturday, 2-1. Allison Scott scored for the Lady Skippers to tie things up late in the first half, but the Cohasset D could not escape unscathed from the relentless attack of the host Crusaders in the second half, though Genovese again stood tall in net, making 10 saves.

"It was a well played game for us, and I was really proud of the effort the girls gave," said Bostwick of the loss that could have gotten her team to the magic .500 mark needed to qualify for the post-season. "If we keep playing like that, we'll win more than we'll lose."

Hopefully, she'll be right on that front the next three times out.

Field hockey notes

The Lady Skippers recently had warm-up jackets added to their ensemble for the first time, courtesy of the newly formed Cohasset Field Hockey Boosters.

The cause was taken up by the parents of backup goalie Caitlyn Condon, and several other parents jumped on the bandwagon to help quickly make the warm-up jackets a reality.

Mite C-5 squad battles back to tie Weymouth

COASTAL STARS "GAME OF THE WEEK"

The life of a youth hockey player is marked by a series of transitions. The fledgling skater goes from pushing a crate under the watchful eye of his parents to an instructional player. The instructional player transitions from a small instructional ice surface to the "big" rink for the start of the Mite year. The Mite transitions to Squirts where the focus moves from instruction to development. The Squirt moves into their Pee Wee years where they learn to check. The Pee Wee sees the game intensify and speed up once they become Bantams. And finally, the committed few who still remain are ready for their rock and sock 'em Midget years.

While each new level brings with it new challenges, there is no transition as exciting as the instructional player becoming a Mite-C. Seeing a first year Mite getting accustomed to a larger ice surface while trying to master icing and off-sides makes for the some of the most enjoyable hockey moments that parents, players, and fans will experience.

The past two weekends marked the opening weekend for the five Coastal Stars Mite - C teams. While all the C teams played well, it is Coach Tim LeBlanc's Mite C-5 team that make it to this week's game of the week column.

This past weekend Coach LeBlanc's C-5 team demonstrated that victory is not in the outcome , but in the effort that goes into the outcome.

The Coastal Stars Mite C-5 team tied a formidable Weymouth opponent, 3-3 in an early morning thriller at Hobomock Arena in Pembroke. Despite the solid goaltending of Star's goalie Jake McDonough, the Stars fell behind early in the first period as a well balanced Weymouth team knocked in a loose puck to register the game's first goal. Before the first period ended Marshfield forward Brandon Shea answered the Weymouth tally with a dazzling break away goal reminiscent of his father, former B.C. star Neil Shea, delighting fans at B.C's McHugh Arena.

With the game tied 1-1 after one, the Stars had to battle back again as Weymouth went ahead for a second time early in the second period. Once again the Weymouth lead did not last long, as once again Shea, who was helped by fellow forwards Michael Halloran and Sean McCarthy, scored his second of the game.

With the game tied going into the third period the Star's grabbed their first lead of the game as the relentless Terrance Doonan following the scoring prowess of older brothers and long time Coastal Stars, Patrick and Brendan, notched his first of the year on a brilliant break away goal. Doonan's goal was the product of his tenacity and linemates Gerard Tierney and Tom Powers' tireless digging.

Weymouth tied the score late in the third despite the impressive defensive effort of defensemen Emily Matthews, Dan LeBlanc, and Johnathan Spitz.

While the game ended in a 3-3 tie Coach LeBlanc and assistant's Neil Shea and Tim McCrystal considered it a victory of effort and perseverance.

And so in this first game- in this first in a series of youth hockey transitions, the Coastal Stars marched triumphantly into their Mite years with a hard fought effort.

Flynn wins SMSA Optimist championship

many years the format for this Championship was changed from a single regatta format to a Grand Prix event consisting of five different regattas. Each competitor's best three scores would be used in determining the winner.

Of course, there were also a number of other regattas in the summer schedule.

The summer racing season started with the Duxbury Bay Optimist Championship, where Andrew sailed to first place, winning five of six races. As part of the first leg of the Grand Prix series, Andrew was off to a good start. The next two events Andrew raced in were the New Bedford Junior Regatta and the Falmouth Regatta. As luck would have it, Andrew sailed to first place in both regattas and had a good streak going.

Next came the Hyannis Regatta, a three day event and one of Andrew's favorite regattas. The previous weekend at Falmouth Andrew had managed to beat Jerry Tullo from Tom's River, New Jersey and one of the nation's top Opti sailors. This weekend would be tough. Throughout the course of three days and 11 races, Andrew was in second place, just four points behind Tullo. Unfortunately, as the result of a protest in the last race, both Andrew and Jerry were disqualified and Andrew finished in sixth.

Bouncing back quickly two days later, Andrew was competing in the Wianno Yacht Club Optimist Championship. This would be the second of Andrew's Grand Prix regattas. In a fleet of 86 boats and five races, Andrew bounced back and emerged in first place. So far he was on track to his summer goal.

Meanwhile Andrew was also competing in a separate set of races, the Buzzards Bay Optimist Series. This is an invitational series held at each of four yacht clubs: Wild Harbor, Megansett, Quisset and Chappaquoit. The club with the most overall points wins the series and the coveted Unkie Cup, a trophy donated four years ago to spur on this series. Andrew had a clean sweep, winning all four regattas and leading Wild Harbor on to victory.

Finally came Andrew's last regatta of the summer, the Beverly Yacht Club Junior Regatta in Marion. If Andrew did well here, he could clinch the Grand Prix series. With the wind and the weather on his side, in a fleet of 63 boats, Andrew won all seven races. He managed not only to win at Beverly, but finalized his hold on the Southern Massachusetts Sailing Association Optimist Championship. From a field of over 500 competitors from twenty-three yacht clubs, Andrew felt lucky to have emerged the winner.

Hingham Civic Theatre's 'Annie' will steal your heart

Tickets on sale now

By Carol Britton Meyer

The lovable orphan girl "Annie" is back in town.

Hingham Civic Music Theatre presents the 1977 Tony Award winning musical Oct. 20, 21 and 27 at 7 p.m. and Oct. 21 and 28 at 2 p.m. in the newly renovated Hingham High School auditorium.

The show features nine performances from HCMT "regulars" and newcomers alike.

The fast moving plot revolves around Annie, an orphan who by a stroke of luck endears herself to billionaire industrialist Oliver Warbucks, along with everyone else she encounters.

The well known play is set in New York City against the backdrop of the Great Depression.

Warbucks' personal assistant, Grace Farrell, ends up taking Annie home as a guest for the holidays where the little girl witnesses his transformation from a seemingly emotionless businessman to a caring father figure.

Grace not only sees how Annie changes the attitudes of those around her, but is touched by the orphan herself.

There's lots of audience pleasing action, fun and familiar tunes.

The enthusiastic performers are full of energy, dance and song offering a performance sure to please audiences of all ages.

Sara Gassert, who played Annie in the Hingham Katy Gilbert production of the popular play last year, once again is cast in the role of the ever-optimistic orphan.

"I really like the role. It seems a lot like me. She's spunky, humorous at times and just loves life and absorbing everything in it," Sara said. "It's a great show, and everyone is working very hard. It's all coming together."

Frank Pickut of Hingham plays Warbucks, and Sheri Ziccardi returns to the HCMT stage after a three-year absence as Grace.

"Working with Hingham Civic is like coming home for me," Ziccardi said. "It gives me the chance to do what I love with people who have become like family to me."

Community theater provides an opportunity for actors and actresses to come together to present quality shows, while at the same time having a good time.

"We all work hard for months, both on stage and behind the scenes, to create the magic audiences see on stage," Ziccardi said. "HCMT embodies what community theater is supposed to be – a place not only where people gather to perform together, but also where people begin and nurture great friendships."

Annie (Sara Gassert) comforts Molly (Kalli Jermyn), left, both of Hingham in HCMT's upcoming production of "Annie."

Ziccardi also played Emily Arden in "State Fair" and Nellie Forbush in "South Pacific" with HCMT.

Miss Hannigan, who runs the orphanage, makes life difficult for the orphans. Theresa Chiasson, who played the Wicked Witch of the West in HCMT's recent production of "The Wizard of Oz," plays the mean-tempered spinster.

EMACT Acting Award winner Joel Leonard of Hingham is cast in six roles, including Bert Healy, an "old radio guy"; Bundles the laundry man, whose laundry basket Annie hides in to escape the orphanage; Louis Howe, a member of "FDR's" staff; Fred, a resident of Hooverville; a dog catcher; and as a member of the adult ensemble.

"That means six costume changes," Leonard said with a laugh.

But he loves every minute of it.

"We have a superb cast – one as talented and good-natured as we've ever had," he said.

Cast members hail from Hingham, Scituate, Hanover, Duxbury and as far away as Mansfield.

The cast couldn't be more enthusiastic. The orphan kids want to keep singing, even when rehearsals are over.

The music throughout the entire play is catchy and the performers perfectly cast in their roles.

Cast members couldn't be more enthusiastic.

"The orphan kids want to keep singing, even when rehearsals are over," Leonard said.

Other Hinghamite performers include Kalli Jermyn, Katy Monaghan and Haley Pickut as the adorable orphans; Kathy Campbell as Mrs. Greer and Connie Boylan; Krista Garrison as Mrs. Pugh and Sophie the Kettle; Emily Hutchinson as Cecile; Stan Campbell as Judge Brandeis; Mary Glavin as a Hooverville-ite; Tophy Woodward as a Cop and Morganthau; and Charlie Meyer as Hull and a dogcatcher.

Others cast in key roles include Joseph J. Cullinane as Rooster Hannigan, Dan Kirichok as Drake and Rachel Carney as Lily St. Regis.

Kirichok played the Tin Man in HCMT's production of "The Wizard of Oz" earlier this year.

The children performing in the musical really light up the stage.

"They are quite talented," Ziccardi said. "I have enjoyed getting to know them during rehearsals."

Scituate performers include Larry MacDonald as "FDR" and his wife, Shirley, as a Hooverville-ite.

Sandy was an orphan

And let's not forget Sandy, the dog, played by Derby, a two-year-old Labrador mix in his stage debut with HCMT. He made his first appearance before an audience in May, when he performed in an agility demonstration at the MSPCA (Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals) in Brockton. He was adopted there.

Derby has attended classes at the MSPCA, Miss Canine Manners in Franklin and at Najaco Obedience.

When he's not "acting," Derby enjoys running, walking, sniffing, chasing and catching toys, hiking in Wompatuck State Park and the Blue Hills and eating.

"Annie" has something for everyone.

"Community theater helps keep outstanding productions accessible to area families and others who might not be able to travel or afford to see regional, national or New York City productions, not to mention that audiences get to see their friends and neighbors on stage," Ziccardi said.

Tickets are $13 in advance and $15 at the door and are available from any cast member or at Buttonwood in Hingham and Cohasset, Noble's Camera Shop in Hingham Square and Corson's Glass House on Route 53 in Hingham.

For tickets or information, call the HCMT ticket line at (781) 789-4327. For more details about HCMT, call Joel Leonard at (781) 749-6431.

Coffee and refreshments will be served in the parish center after the 9:30 Sunday Mass.

The shower culminates a nine-month-long Spiritual Adoption Program, during which parishoners are invited to "spiritually adopt" an unborn baby in prayer. The parish Respect Life Committee also hosts a weekly pro-life rosary every Friday after the 7:30 a.m. Mass throughout the year.

Also, the parish will hold a men's clothing drive the weekend of Nov. 18 to benefit the St. Francis House Shelter in Boston.

COHASSET'S WEEK

More traffic control sought

Selectmen recently received two neighborhood petitions seeking additional traffic control.

While grateful for the recent addition of "Slow Children" signs to the street, residents say most trucks and cars are still exceeding the posted 30 mph speed limit.

"It is very common for both cars and trucks to 'rev' their engines from Cushing Street to gain speed going up the hill, and in addition, they come racing down Pleasant as they gain momentum," Pleasant Street families wrote.

They asked for a revised speed limit of 15 mph and a prohibition of commercial trucks from travelling on the street.

Twenty-seven neighbors in the Linden Drive, Linden Circle, Rustic Drive and Stonehegh Lane are requesting signs saying "Slow, Children Playing" be posted in their neighborhood which has 88 children.

"We feel the signs would remind drivers on these roads to drive slowly and exercise caution," they wrote.

Electronic waste resolution backed

Water Commissioner John McNabb, who also sits on the recycling committee, is spearheading an effort to have manufacturers take back discarded electronic products. An increasing problem for Massachusetts is the 75,000 tons of electronic waste a year, which is only expected to increase. There is a national campaign to get a voluntary agreement from the manufacturers to pay for the disposal of their products. Cohasset has approved the resolution to which McNabb hopes 100 communities will join.

Pipe laying

At their regular Wednesday meeting, the Norfolk County Commissioners approved the request of the Cohasset Board of Selectmen for the county's Engineering Department to assist in laying 122 feet of pipe on easement on the corner of King Street and Schofield Road and document same for town records.

An article before the November town meeting proposes new drainage piping to correct recurring problems in the area. The county's Engineering Department has long provided such traffic counting services to county towns as part of the county's regular community service. Norfolk County Commissioners include William P. O'Donnell of Norwood, John M. Gillis of Quincy, and Peter H. Collins of Milton. The commissioners may be reached by calling 781-461-6105.

Straits Pond grant

Hull and Cohasset have received the Coastal Pollution Remediation (CPR) grant, a program under the Straits Pond Watershed Association Stormwater Pollution Assessment Project, in the amount of $25,500 to study the effects of pollution on marine resources that will later lead to mitigation actions.

This grant is made possible by the Massachusetts Office of Coastal Management (CZM). The towns of Hull and Cohasset must work together to finish the project by June 30, 2002, when the fiscal year ends and the funds expire.

This project must be paid for up front by the individual towns, who will request reimbursement no later than July 31, 2002.

"These funds are vital to the review of the Straits Pond Watershed area," said state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham. "This study will help the towns of Hull and Cohasset deal with the storm water in the most effective manner."

"This program plays an important role in the safety our community safety. Our water supply is an essential part of our lives; its cleanliness is directly linked to our health. Continued support via grants will ensure that the stormwater in Hull and Cohasset will be kept clean and beautiful," said state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth.

Class II license wins approval

Patrick Peterson, of 9 Cushing Road, has been approved for a class two license to buy, sell or trade used cars. Peterson intends to use his home as a base of operations for fixing up used cars. Not just any used cars as Peterson stated, but luxury/sport cars of American heritage primarily from the late 60s and early 70s. Peterson emphasized that there is not going to be cars sitting in his lawn with a for sale sign, rather he intends to use the permit as a way to learn the ropes of the business. "I'm not going to be a running a used car mart," he said. Peterson will make his cars available to buy on the Internet, in print, and through mailers.

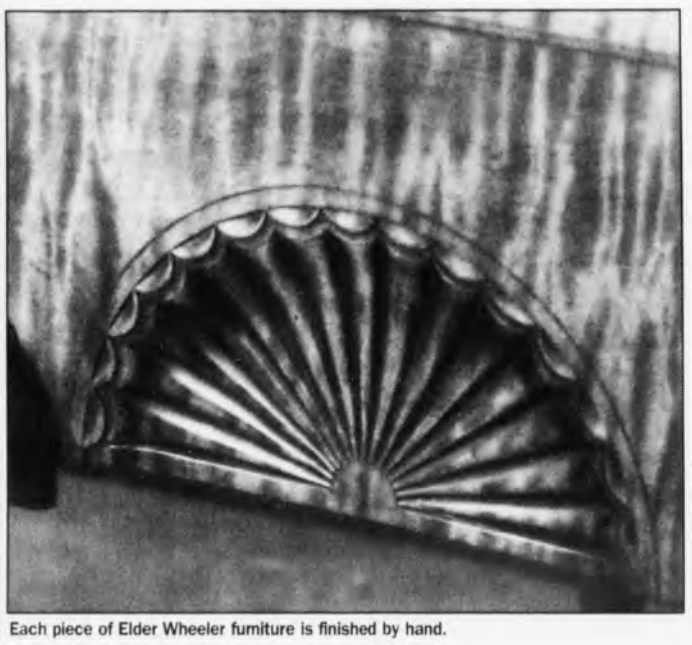
Eldred to share his love of style



Furniture company founder gives talk

By Constance Gorfinkle
SPECIAL TO THE HINGHAM JOURNAL

On his way to a graduate degree from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Emmett Eldred got sidetracked by furniture. That's right furniture, antique furniture in particular, such as bonnet-type highboys, block-front chests and slant-lid desks.

A native of Washington State, where, says Eldred, "There's not much in the way of antiques," the transplanted college boy became fascinated by the workmanship and creativity of New England's Colonial craftsmen, who, in the 18th century, were being influenced by English design, but adding new and exciting ideas to their own tables, chairs and bureaus.

Each piece of Elder Wheeler furniture is finished by hand.

Between visits to antique auctions and reading everything on furniture he could find, Eldred did go on to pursue a scientific career in the area of photonics, which has to do with light and optics. But his "hobby and passion" has remained over the past several decades the study and collecting of furniture, which, in 1979, led him to found, with Bill Wheeler, Eldred Wheeler, a company that makes period reproductions.

Eldred, who still is involved with the company as an advisor, will give a lecture, sponsored by the Hingham Historical Society, on his favorite topic, Oct. 24, 10 a.m., at Old Derby Academy, 34 Main St., Hingham.

Titled "A Primer on Antique American Furniture," Eldred's talk will concentrate on "different furniture periods, style, materials, regionality and construction," he said during a recent phone interview from his home in West Falmouth.

"Then I will walk through a bit of evolution," Eldred continued, meaning he will take a certain piece of furniture, "like a highboy," and trace how its style developed over time, in keeping with people's needs and tastes.

He may even, he said, bring along to the Hingham lecture a couple of small pieces of furniture, with which he will demonstrate each of his points.

Early on, as Eldred was teaching himself how to recognize genuine antiques, he came up with the idea of thinking about each piece of furniture as though it were an archeological find. Because, unlike other antique objects, "with furniture you really have to develop an eye for a lot of the subtleties."

To help himself do that Eldred remembered an archeological course he once took. "Basically, (in archeology) there's a checklist of about 20 things" to help one determine what era an object belongs to, "and if that object has 16 of those things, that's pretty good.

"Furniture is a little bit the same way; you have to be a detective. Ultimately, you get to the point that you're looking at a piece and it begins to tell you a story. But it takes a fair amount of time to train yourself to do that."

To determine if the piece of furniture you've come across genuinely belongs to a certain era, there are certain things you must look for, said Eldred: "The size, the wood, the interior, condition — like is the hardware the original brass, and, of course, originality."

What especially appealed to Eldred about the Colonial cabinetmakers is the innovative ways they adapted English design to their countrymen's requirements. Because, after all, in this new land to which people had fled to create new lives for themselves, it was only natural that craftsmen would express themselves in new and different ways.

"In England, in the 18th century especially," Eldred points out, "there was a very rigid guild for cabinetmakers. They had to follow certain sizes, certain proportions. So, it was really pretty uninspired stuff. Whereas here they had no restraints."

Such was the theory behind Eldred Wheeler. "I wanted to build things that were accurate and appealing, at least to my eye. But we never actually copied period furniture." Rather, the aim was to be true to the way an 18th-century Colonial craftsman might have constructed a piece, including certain details and proportions inspired by English design, but, in the same way his forebear did, let the piece evolve according to his own aesthetics.

"I wanted to build things that were accurate and appealing, at least to my eye. But we never actually copied period furniture."
— Emmett Eldred

In his talk, says Eldred, he will discuss to a large extent his own favorite furniture style — country high style. That category differs from high style in that the pieces are less grand in size and are constructed of fairly common woods, such as walnut or birch instead of mahogany. Necessarily, furniture labeled as country high style will be less valuable than their more elaborate counterparts, said Eldred.

Because those creating high style furniture in 18th-century New England were, by and large, cabinetmakers, trained in England, who were working to order for wealthy customers and had access to the most precious woods. On the other hand, the man fashioning high-country-style furniture that had been inspired by the imposing work of a schooled compatriot might have started out as a casket maker who was carving a piece for himself or a neighbor out of a tree he had felled in his own backyard. Those differences mean that in today's market the high-style piece probably could out-price its country cousin by about 200 percent, said Eldred.

Though Eldred is particularly attracted to high style country, "I do have a couple of high-style pieces — I apologize," he laughed.

The point of his addressing groups like the Hingham Historical Society, Eldred summed up, "Is that I want to share the experience that I've had as somebody who has been out there trying to collect a few things and (with that experience) advise others — though I don't do that professionally — about what they might look for, whether they want to collect or just appreciate antique furniture."

Eldred's lecture will be preceded by refreshments at 9:30 a.m. Admission is $10 in advance; $12 at the door, if seating is available. Make checks payable to the Hingham Historical Society, and send to the society, P.O. Box 434, Hingham, 02043. For more information, call 781-749-0144.

Conductor fine tunes his craft

HSO's Jin Kim brushes up at Prague seminar

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

While our country and other parts of the world are involved in war, Hingham Symphony Orchestra (HSO) conductor Jin Kim is still using the power of music to bring people together.

Kim just returned from Prague where he attended a prestigious music seminar called the Sibelius Symposium. He left for the trip a few weeks after the attacks on the nation. During his travels there, Kim prepared himself for the upcoming HSO Masterworks concert at Jordan Hall in Boston, but he also had an opportunity to learn what it's like during wartime overseas.

"I didn't get a chance to see that much of Prague, because I was studying most of the time that I was there," Kim said. "But there was one day I managed to take a look around. A lot of the towns there have American monuments because we helped liberate them from the Germans. All the monuments I saw had candles and flowers on them."

The two-week program that Kim attended focused on the study of Jean Sibelius, a renowned composer who died in 1957. Kim was one of only five American conductors invited to the seminar.

Hingham Symphony Orchestra conductor Jin Kim

"There were a dozen conductors in all," Kim said. "We basically just studied the music of Sibelius and got coaching from the (seminar's) artistic director, Jorma Panula." He added Panula is considered by many to be "the maestro of maestros."

"All the students Panula taught went on to be very successful," Kim added.

The seminar consisted of continuous rehearsal sessions, discussion and score study. Despite the fact he got very little sleep, and despite all the hard work, Kim was more than happy to be there.

"When I got invited, I was extremely honored," Kim said. "Panula is a legendary figure. I came away from the trip with a sense of awe. I also came away understanding why his students are so successful. I feel that I am absolutely a better conductor having gone through the program."

Kim said the day he spent walking around Prague he learned the powerful and important role music plays to people in that area of the world.

"I was amazed at the number of classical music concerts that were going on while I was there," he said. "It was literally playing everywhere. Ninety percent of the flyers hanging up there were about classical concerts."

Kim said he feels the lessons he learned in Prague helped prepare him for the upcoming Masterworks Concerts he'll conduct in Hingham, Oct. 20 and at Jordan Hall Oct. 21. Kim said this year will mark the first time the symphony has ever played in such a prestigious facility like the hall.

"I think the Symposium has definitely changed me—the whole (HSO) will be affected for the better," Kim said. "I also think the experience is going to help me re-emphasize what the focus of the (HSO) is all about. And the best part is that Jordan Hall is an acoustically magic place. A good concert hall is an instrument."

Kim said there will not be any Sibelius pieces incorporated into the Masterworks show, but he said studying all those works rejuvenated his performance standards. Instead of Sibelius, Kim said the orchestra will be playing works from Beethoven, Frank Martin and Carl Nielsen.

Kim said in light of his trip to Prague, and out of respect for the events of Sept. 11, he decided on a repertoire of reflective music rather than directly addressing the issue.

"I think the music will speak for itself," he said. "We're paying tribute to all the victims in our own way."

Kim said he will always remember the positive aspects of his trip to Prague, but he said there will always be one unsettling memory that will stick with him.

"I think one of the most memorable experiences of the trip for me was flying Swissair both ways," he said. "The airline actually went belly-up while I was in Prague. It was pretty scary. The other frightening thing was seeing guards with machine guns at Logan Airport. The flight over there was pretty empty and on the way back, there were a lot more people. While I was coming back on the fuller flight, I couldn't help thinking about the people who lost their lives on Sept. 11, and how it has affected our nation. In the end, I think the upside of humanity will triumph over the downside."

For more information on the upcoming Masterworks shows on Oct. 20 and Oct. 21 call (781) 740-5694.

Photos: Members of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra gear up for the upcoming Masterworks show being held in Hingham and in Boston on Oct. 20 and 21. Orchestra conductor Jin Kim said he's approaching the concert with a fresh outlook in light of a music seminar in Prague he recently attended.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

Comic robbers on the run

Bandits (B+)

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

The buddy movie is as venerable as romantic comedy, anguishing melodrama, cowboys and Indians, cops and robbers and of more recent vintage, special effects-driven apocalyptic extravaganzas, though today the guardians of our well-being think the latter is too much for us. So the new Arnold Schwarzenegger terrorism flick is shelved and we are comforted by the latest miserable excuse for a movie featuring disemboweling and throat slitting (see, or rather don't see, "From Hell"), since it's just a domestic costume thriller unlikely to disturb our rest.

We confront "Bandits" comforted because the bad guys are really OK — meaning they're witty and don't kill anybody — and no one suffers because bank accounts are federally insured, so we convince ourselves that since Mr. Smith loses nothing when his money is stolen from the bank, only the feds do, as if "government dollars" aren't just yours and mine once or twice removed. The lovable bad guys, like Butch and Sundance, are icons, but some, like Bonnie and Clyde, weren't lovable after all, although in "Bandits" they are. Come meet Joe (Bruce Willis), impulsive yet shrewd, and his best buddy in prison, from which early on they bust out, Terry (Bill Bob Thornton), who is hypochondriacal and an all-purpose worry-wort.

Joe and Terry start robbing banks because they need cash after they flee prison, and it proves to be so easy they come up with a scheme to make it simpler: They go to the bank manager's house at night, hold him and his family hostage, then in the wee hours before the bank opens, go with the manager and rob the bank. (Of course, more sensibly, and with less likelihood of having a bad dinner and a lumpy bed, they could just abduct the manager in the morning, without the sleep-over, but let that be.) They become known as the "Sleep-Over Bandits" and take on mythic charm as they rack up real dollars all along the West Coast.

"Bandits" grabs us at the top while Joe and Terry are in a big bank surrounded by armed cops, and yanks us back, repeatedly, to a gravel-voiced TV interviewer (Bobby Slayton) getting their story as they sit in his deluxe house, then pulls us farther back into their prison break and the strategizing of their technique. But the movie truly comes alive when they cross paths, or rather when Terry crosses paths, with a housewife, Kate (Cate Blanchett), whose husband ignores her and she storms out. Terry brings her to Joe of necessity but Joe falls for her, and she is soon riding along with our anti-heroes and Joe's cousin Harvey (Troy Garity), who becomes their operative and wheel-man. Harvey dreams of being a stunt man, Kate dreams of life on the road with her man (or men, as the plot plods on), Joe dreams of luxury and easy street, and Terry dreams about his health, his multitude of phobias, his future and Kate.

"Bandits" rests on a weary plot device but sails on the wings of Blanchett's vibrant performance; it has plenty of zip owing largely to Thornton's clever incarnation of a man so bright that he suffers the curse of the intelligent: knowing what comes next. We don't know what comes at the end, in retrospect obvious but as it unfolds catchy and smart, though we do know along the way that this is buddy flick lite and no masterpiece. Still, like a good medium size heist at a local yokel bank, good, even if not great, is often good enough.

Billy Bob Thornton and Bruce Willis talk about the woman of their dreams while she (Cate Blanchett) is out of earshot.

'Frankenstein' creator arrives just in time for Halloween

Edgar Winter rocks Vincent's Oct. 24

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

After three decades of rockin' and rollin', Edgar Winter knows what his fans expect. But he also promises to give them a whole lot more, from the roadhouse R&B roots of his past to the experimental blues and jazz possibilities seen for the future.

The Texas-born singer/keyboardist/saxophonist expects to deliver on those promises when his current four-piece band rolls into Vincent's in Randolph on Oct. 24, in the next edition of the club's Wednesdays Rock! concert series. Winter's recent tours with his new band have also been boosted by a spate of other recent appearances on television, radio and TV ads and film soundtracks.

"We try to play everything audiences want to hear in our club shows," said Winter from his Los Angeles home studio. "This includes 'Tobacco Road,' 'Free Ride' and, of course, the indestructible monster 'Frankenstein.' But we've always had a very diverse musical palette to draw from, with a band of some very experienced players, and all the styles of which I think are interrelated."

"I've always been associated with synthesizers, mainly because of 'Frankenstein.' I was the first to put a strap on a keyboard and play it standup like a guitar, and so I have that recognition. But I'm very conversant with the blues, as listeners would hopefully remember well from the days before 'Frankenstein.' My early bands were very much in the styles of roadhouse, hard-driving, horn-section rock n' roll, funk and R&B, with a sense of jazz experimentation along with blues roots. This musical direction is partly what led to stuff like 'Frankenstein' during that era, but the original sound I had with bands like White Trash and the first Edgar Winter Group is what I've wanted to get back to in the last few years. My recent albums and tours have tried to focus on different aspects of that sound," Winter said.

Winter's career was launched in the early 1970s, in a musical style much closer to that of his electric-blues guitar-slinging older brother Johnny than what he would venture toward later on. The facts that both siblings were albino (and even thought to be twins at first) and possessed burning, white-hot howls for voices as respective band-frontmen made them instant attractions on the national rock scene, cutting exotic, ghostly visual images onstage while smoking fresh and alluring spins on the era's Southern-style rock/R&B.

Edgar Winter and his band will perform at Vincent's Oct. 24.

But while Johnny Winter has sustained a career of rather streamlined, hyperdrive electric guitar-blues, brother Edgar's musical M.O. has essentially been one of diversity. A keyboardist/saxophonist by trade, Edgar Winter began pursuing tendencies toward jazz, fusion and even country with his classic self-named group, which included notable bandmates such as guitarist Ronnie Montrose (who later introduced lead vocalist Sammy Hagar to the rock world in his own self-named band) and bassist and future pop solo artist, the late Dan Hartman ("I Can Dream About You").

When not recording or touring with his own bands, Winter has plied his talents to extensive session and film soundtrack work, notably some guest sax solo spots on Meatloaf's 1978 Bat Out of Hell LP. Interestingly enough, among the singer/musician's TV spots in recent years was a Miller Lite beer commercial, playing a hip counterpoint to straight-arrow Hollywood actor George Hamilton.

"Jazz and blues to me are the two great American music contributions," said Winter, speaking of two recent independent CD projects, the newly released Winter Blues, a rootsy exploration of blues styles, and the soon-to-appear Jazzin' the Blues, an adventurous fusion of blues and jazz. Material from both discs will be highlighted in the singer's show at Vincent's.

"When I started out in music, I had no real intention of becoming famous or a rock star or what-have-you. I loved jazz and blues and I was mainly interested in doing what I could to break down musical barriers as I saw them at the time," Winter said. Getting people from different backgrounds to get together and play different kinds of music. I was fortunate enough to get recognition for what I was doing by winning the Playboy jazz poll for best alto saxophonist for most of the years during the 70s."

"In the late 70s and 80s, I didn't make records for a while, partly because of too much intervention from record companies, who always seem to want to pigeonhole you into a particular style or market. But ultimately I think it's up to musical artists themselves to maintain the integrity of what they do, just present themselves with honesty and hope that their music finds an audience. I try to demonstrate that with the variety of music that I work with," Winter said.

Vincent's is located in the Lombardo's Complex in Randolph. All shows in the Wednesdays Rock! series are 21 and over and begin at 8:30, doors open at 7:30. Tickets are available online at www.ticketweb.com by calling 866-468-7619 and at all Strawberries records and tapes.

Pantry pasta sauce

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

The most useful recipes for weeknight dinners use pantry staples paired with pasta. It's quick, it's easy, and it's satisfying. A common Italian approach to this sort of recipe is to pair canned tuna with olives, capers, and anchovies. Having tested a handful of these recipes, however, I found that they are still tomato sauces, using either chunks of tomatoes or tomato paste. This requires a bit more cooking time but, more to the point, tomatoes mute the bold flavors of the ingredients. I wanted a recipe that was best, bold, and easy.

I cobbled together a working recipe using olive oil, garlic, anchovies, olives, capers, pine nuts, and chopped parsley. I started with olive oil in a heated, large skillet followed by the garlic and anchovies. Next I added olives, capers, tuna and a bit of pine nuts and stirred just long enough to heat through. Finally I tossed in one pound of cooked pasta, the chopped parsley, additional olive oil, salt and pepper.

The first problem was the garlic. Onion made a better pairing and, after some testing, I settled on thin slices of red onion that retain some of their punch. The anchovies were keepers - they provided a nice briny undercurrent to the sauce. I settled on 2 large or 3 medium anchovies - any more and the tuna was overpowered. For the olives, oil-cured black olives were best. (Brine-cured olives were too salty.) Two tablespoons of capers were a nice addition although I quickly dumped the pine nuts which were too sweet and therefore out of place. For the tuna, I tested the Italian variety soaked in olive oil which was too soft. I also tried chunk light tuna soaked in water and found it was just as mushy. However, solid white albacore tuna was just right. It was best when it was drained and flaked before using. I tested a variety of herbs but the fresh, grassy flavor of chopped parsley was both the simplest and best addition.

In terms of cooking, I found that it best to heat the anchovies in the olive oil before adding other ingredients. They start to dissolve and their flavor is slightly muted. Next, the sliced onions are added - just until they lose their crunch - and then the tuna, olives, capers and 1/4 teaspoon salt. When the ingredients are mixed together and heated through, about 1 minute more, they are ready for the pasta, parsley, and raw olive oil. For this recipe I liked using penne since it offers crevices in which this chunky sauce can lodge. (You can also use rotini, fusili, penne or farfalle.) Cheese was unnecessary and unwelcome but a few grinds of black pepper were a nice finishing touch. Total cooking time: 5 minutes. Total experience: bold and satisfying.

PANTRY PASTA SAUCE WITH TUNA, OLIVES, AND CAPERS

This sauce is best made quickly so that the bold flavors of the ingredients maintain their personality. Other than the anchovies and onion, you are simply heating them through.

1/4 cup best quality olive oil
2 large or 3 medium anchovies, chopped
1/2 cup red onion, very thinly sliced
1 six-ounce can solid white tuna packed in water, drained and slightly flaked with a fork
1/3 cup oil cured black olives, pitted and coarsely chopped
2 tablespoons capers
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 pound pasta, penne or some other shape that will trap bits of the sauce, preferred
2 tablespoons chopped flat leaf parsley
Freshly ground black pepper

1. Place a large pot of salted water over high heat to boil. When boiling, add pasta and cook until al dente (just cooked through). Meanwhile, heat a large skillet or sauté pan over medium heat. Add 2 tablespoons of olive oil and the anchovies and cook, stirring, until the anchovies dissolve, about 1 minute.

Add the onion and cook until just softened, about 1 minute more. Add the tuna, olives, capers and salt and cook, stirring, until heated through, 1 to 2 minutes.

2. Add the cooked pasta, parsley, and remaining 2 tablespoons olive oil and mix well, evenly coating the pasta with sauce. Season with freshly ground black pepper to taste and serve immediately.

Astral week

THURSDAY, OCT. 18

This a day to get things done. Take on a full work agenda. Tackle jobs that need repair, redoing, or projects that have been problematic. You can work out the glitches and find new solutions. The moon continues its travel in Scorpio, generating a serious, intense mood. Unexpected setbacks or distractions may surface between 11:10 a.m.-2:10 p.m., when the moon aligns with Uranus. At 6:30 p.m. the moon interacts with Mars and becomes inactive.

FRIDAY, OCT. 19

The moon enters optimistic Sagittarius at 4:47 a.m. However, a 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Jupiter warns you to use common sense. Avoid making impulsive purchases, promises or diversions. Put new ideas on hold for a few days. Don't be a hermit tonight. An alignment of Venus and Neptune makes this evening prime for social and romantic activities.

SATURDAY, OCT. 20

The moon forms challenging contacts to Pluto at 4:36 a.m. and Saturn at 6:31 a.m. After that storm clouds move out, fun and sunny astrological weather returns for the remainder of the day. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can be productive. Carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. On the other hand, this day rates high for socializing and partying. Gather with friends and let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, OCT. 21

Take it slow and easy this morning. Enjoy favorite leisure activities, spend quality time with friends and family. At 7:42 a.m. the Sagittarius moon becomes inactive until 11:11 a.m., when it enters ambitious Capricorn. The remainder of the day is prime for getting things done. Catch up on work or study projects. Follow through on promises you have made to others; repay debts, fulfill commitments.

MONDAY, OCT. 22

Resolve to start this day with an upbeat, lighthearted attitude. Sidestep feelings of doubt, fear, frustration. Take on a busy work schedule; you can be most productive. The good news is that Mercury begins direct travel at 8:23 p.m., 14 1/2 degrees Libra. The next Mercury retrograde period will occur in January 2002. Plan to launch important new enterprises tomorrow evening, when favorable influences occur. In the meantime, clean up old business and get your ducks in line.

TUESDAY, OCT. 23

The sun enters Scorpio at 4:26 a.m., remaining there until November 22. The Capricorn moon urges you to keep your nose to the grindstone. Hard work will pay off. Tackle jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. At 4:12 p.m. the moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive. An Aquarius moon takes over at 9:26 p.m. The most favorable period for signing contracts and launching important ventures occurs between 9:26-10:42 p.m., when Mercury forms a harmonious contact to Saturn. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 10:58 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 24

The Aquarius moon aligns with Neptune in the morning, accenting the need for clarity and focus regarding details, minor points. On the other hand, this is a prime time for developing humanitarian or environmental programs. People will be receptive, supportive. The green light for new starts goes on at 11:00 a.m. You can start large-scale enterprises, make major purchases and decisions, set long-term plans and goals. The remainder of the day also rates high for social activities or romantic rendezvous.

THURSDAY, OCT. 25

There are bound to be some exciting developments in the next few days. Keep an open mind. Explore new horizons, develop alliances, set goals. You can break new ground at home or work. The Aquarius moon interacts with Uranus at 3:32 p.m. and becomes inactive. Uranus, the planetary ruler of Aquarius, is slowing its rate of motion, preparing for direct travel on October 30. An applying alignment of Venus and Pluto may spark romantic passions this evening. Take a walk on the wild side.

FRIDAY, OCT. 26

The moon enters Pisces at 9:56 a.m. The planet Venus forms major contacts to Pluto and Saturn today and Jupiter tomorrow. Creativity and artistic sensitivity are at an all-time high. You can experience breakthroughs and achieve goals. Appreciate or create art, music, photography, dance. Relationship or financial issues may also come to the forefront. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury-Jupiter warns against jumping to conclusions or going to extremes. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days.

Colorful fall fruits and foliages

Green thumbs up

Part I

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Our local roadsides and landscapes are ablaze with fabulous fall color as our native maples don their cheerful autumn garb of fiery reds, golds and oranges, appearing luminescent against a bright blue sky. Around the borders of our lakes and ponds, their multi-colored foliages cast brilliant reflections on smooth, glassy surfaces. Migrating songbirds dart about the garden, chirping and twittering in the trees overhead as they join forces to make the long journey to their winter residences. Throughout our region, Mother Nature is displaying all the glory of her autumn finery as our plants and creatures make preparations for the chilly months ahead.

Barely more than a week ago, tiny snowflakes swirled about as a brisk, breezy day culminated in a frigid evening delivering a deadly blow to many South Shore communities. As I gazed out my window shortly after daybreak on that chilly morn, it was evident by the frosty lawn, coated with glistening white ice crystals, that the end to my growing season had come to pass. A brief inspection of my impatiens, marigolds, coleus, dahlias and other tender plants confirmed my suspicions, as I sadly witnessed their limp, lifeless, blackened stems and leaves drooping in all but the most sheltered comers. Predictably, warmer weather has returned, furnishing an opportunity to remove these casualties of cold as I begin the process of putting the gardens to bed, pausing from time to time to soak in the sun's warmth and savor the sights and sounds of a glorious autumn afternoon.

While many gardeners purchase plants solely on the basis of their flowers, I have made it my mission in my writings, lectures and plantings to emphasize the importance of growing plants which offer multiple seasons of interest. Foliage should be a primary consideration when selecting plant material, as it is the predominant feature of most plants for the majority of the growing season. Spectacular blooms should be considered merely a bonus as they tend to be visible for only a limited time. Two weeks of pretty flowers can rarely justify six months or more of unattractive foliage. The exception, of course, would be annual plants, which bloom for most of the season, once established by midsummer.

Form, texture, the ultimate size of the mature plants and suitability to the growing conditions are additional factors to ponder during the selection process.

Woody plants serve as the backbone of landscape design, giving form and structure to our surroundings throughout the year. When planning or planting a new garden or landscape, I often begin with plants which provide fall and winter interest. With very little effort on our part, nature paints a colorful portrait beginning in spring with the greening of the landscape and continuing through the growing season, but as the seasons change and our plantings decline, many landscapes become a monochromatic shade of brown. The addition of trees and shrubs which offer fall and winter beauty greatly enhance the dormant landscape at a time when we yearn for it most. Focus these cold season plantings in areas where they can be readily viewed from windows. Spring and summer flowering plants will be relatively easy to integrate once the backbone of attractive cold weather plants is established.

Evergreens provide a dramatic contrast to the drab browns and grays of the dormant landscape. Spruces, pines, hemlocks, firs and cedars all present commanding, distinctive forms. Yews, junipers, false cypress (Chamaecyparis spp.), and conifers are available in a wealth of sizes and color variations including blue, yellow, rust and innumerable shades of green. The many valuable members of the holly family are glorious in all seasons. Other broadleaf evergreens, such as rhododendrons, may not look their best up close on the coldest days as their leaves curl to minimize desiccation, but their green or bronze foliage still brightens the bleak winter terrain.

Mature evergreen trees and shrubs provide blocks of color and form, even at a substantial distance, and can be planted to frame views and create boundaries. Plant evergreens in small groupings rather than dotting them all over the yard which may tend to create a polka dot effect. Use them as backdrops for the handsome, white bark of birches or the branches of yellow or red-twigged dogwoods. Avoid vast plantings of large conifers, however, which may produce a dark, gloomy effect, especially in restricted spaces.

Judiciously selected, deciduous trees and shrubs can be equally effective in providing year-round beauty. Look for plants which, in addition to attractive blossoms and warm weather foliage, produce colorful fall foliage and fruits, peeling bark, or those which contribute elegant frameworks, even when their foliage is no longer present.

Parking planned panned

Youth board irked by CRC garage idea

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Garage in the village is in the throes of preparing for a Halloween dance. But the recent scare that sent chills through the teen center has nothing to do with the October holiday.

Members of the Cohasset Youth Resources Committee that oversees the Garage have learned that the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation is eyeing the former DPW building for a garage of a different sort.

According to recreation director Jack Worley, who also serves on the youth resources committee, a multi-level parking garage is an option being considered by the CRC, a private group planning infrastructure improvements in partnership with the town.

Dean Rizzo, executive director of the CRC, said additional parking is something the village sorely needs.

"It's nothing new," he said. "The only space to really expand is on town-owned land where the teen center is located." He also noted the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority also looked at adding parking there to replace the 60 or so spaces that will be lost along the right-of-way when the train is constructed.

Rizzo described the parking plans as being in the "idea" stage and any firm plans for additional parking in the village would be up to the town.

"Our role is only to bring ideas forward," he said.

But those behind the teen center want the issue taken off the table. To that end they have scheduled a special meeting of the youth resources committee at 7 p.m.,

Coxswain John Liffman coaches rowers Charlie Anderson, Dan Littauer, Chris Pabela and Ian Hickey as they compete in the Head of the Weir River Race on Sunday. The rowers, who placed first in the popular event, are part of the Cohasset Maritime Institute, based at the boathouse on the Hagerty property. Jack Buckley, CMI founder, hopes to convince selectmen to allow him to expand his program into the Hagerty house.

Maritime school eyes old Hagerty house

Selectmen to discuss building's future

By Evan Schiff and Mary Ford

The Lobster Lab is a vision that has faded but the Cohasset Maritime Institute is very much in focus. Until recently, the two "maritime learning centers" shared the Hagerty property at the foot of Parker Avenue.

The Lobster Lab leased the former Cohasset Colonials office and CMI, a rowing and maritime education center, leases the antique boathouse at the site. The town rented both structures to the nonprofit organizations for the nominal fee of $1 a year.

But now with the exodus of the Lobster Lab, whose founder Kevin Ulmer couldn't meet the requirements of the lease in terms of fundraising and upkeep of the building, the Hagerty house is once again up for grabs.

Selectmen will devote time at their Nov. 13 meeting for suggestions and discussion about what to do with the Victorian house.

Buckley hopes selectmen will be enthusiastic about his proposal to expand CMI into the first floor of the building. He sees CMI as "co-stewards" of the building working in partnership with the town to maintain and improve the structure. As with the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation, which successfully manages the town-owned Lightkeepers Residence that includes a function hall and rented apartments on nearby Government Island, Buckley sees a multi-use future for the Hagerty house.

Cohasset Colonials, a furniture kit company, occupied the building and two-acre Hagerty site for some 50 years. The Hagerty house — so called because the late Francis Hagerty once owned Cohasset Colonials — was moved from the Rowe's Wharf area in Boston to Parker Avenue in the early 1900s.

The town bought the Hagerty property back in 1993 when Cohasset Colonials relocated to Hingham. By purchasing the land, the town prevented another industrial use of the site and opened up the possibilities of a public park at the waterfront, which has now become a reality with the development of Mariners Park at the site.

But to Buckley, a rowing enthusiast who got hooked on the sport at the Hull Lifesaving Museum, the property's history is no doubt second only to its location on Bailey's Creek. The boathouse has

No reason to put off getting back in shape

CMHS fitness center is cheap and convenient

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

A fitness center with low membership fees, no lines at the machines, and within five minutes of anywhere in town, should add up to a great place to work out.

"It has everything you would want, weight machines, free weights, treadmills and stair-masters for cardiovascular," said Jack DeLorenzo, who is assistant principal at Cohasset Middle High-School and also supervises the fitness center when it's open

The center contains four treadmills, five bikes, two stair-masters, a leg press, Nautilus machines, rowing machines, plenty of free weights, and myriad other equipment to get one in shape.

The two-year-old center, housed in the former senior class study hall, was originally built for the athletes at the school but once it was all set up, opening it up to the public seemed like a good idea.

"It is a relatively quality facility," says Jack Worley, director of the Cohasset Recreation Department that runs the year-round center in after-school hours. "We thought if we opened it to the public at relatively low cost, the money would provide revenue for upkeep of the equipment."

"It's so convenient, there's more machines then I ever imagined."
— Stu Cahill, Jerusalem Road

But with only about 12-15 regular members at the gym, the recreation department wants to spread the word about the facility.

"The more people, the better we'll be able to maintain it and the more hours we'll be able to keep it open," Worley said.

DeLorenzo said the fitness center's focus is firming up and toning muscles rather than body building.

"We want people to feel good about themselves," he said. DeLorenzo said the group that works out at the center is so close knit, the men and women even celebrate members' birthdays with cakes.

Teacher mentoring program required

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

A study has shown the retention rates for teachers that have been in the program is 91 percent for the following year.

The students won't be the only ones being taught at Cohasset Public Schools from now on.

The Department of Education has mandated a formal teacher mentoring program begin for all public schools starting this month. A new teacher to a school system will be assigned a mentor who has been with the school system for at least three years and has their professional teaching certificate, said Ruth Fennessey, curriculum coordinator. Even if a teacher has taught in another school district, the mentoring program will take place.

Fennessey said she thinks it is "an excellent program, designed to retain new teachers and capitalize on the experience of the older teachers." Fennessey said the majority of the goals of the program is an attempt to establish trust between the mentor and the new teacher as well as to communicate the essence of the school community.

Superintendent Edward Malvey said that although he thought the state did not need to mandate the program, it was a good idea. "We welcome the program," Malvey said.

The pair of teachers are required to meet once a month to review and talk about policies. The program is just getting under way and Fennessey expects it to be in full force come next September.

The mentors visit the new teachers classrooms to observe their teaching technique and give the new teachers feedback. The new teachers are encouraged to observe their mentor's classes to try and learn about teaching technique.

There are currently 18 mentors in Cohasset Public Schools. There was a workshop last summer as well as a training manual to help and teach the mentors how to be effective and establish a consistency among the training. A teacher must apply to be a part of the program.

A study has shown the retention rates for teachers that have been in the program is 91 percent for the following year. The retention rate without the program is at 71 percent.

The mentors are given a small stipend.

We'll make you smile.

Senior year OK

The school committee voted to allow a student to continue her senior year at the high school even though she no longer lives in town. School department policy allows students, who are no longer residents, to complete their senior year.

Voter registration

Any citizen of the United States who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before a Town Meeting or election day may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register to vote. If you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home.

Registration, is closed for a brief period before each town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If you register during a "closed" period, you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections.

The last day to register to vote for the Special Town Meeting on Monday, Nov. 5, is Friday, Oct. 26, 2W from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. at the Town Clerk's office. Mail-in registration forms are available from the Town Clerk's office, Cohasset Post Office and Paul Pratt Memorial Library and must be postmarked on or before Oct. 26.

Musical mystery at Conservatory

South Shore Conservatory presents its Musical Mystery Dinners fund raising event on Saturday, Oct. 27, 6 p.m., at the Hingham campus.

The evening begins with a reception at South Shore Conservatory, followed by dinner parties hosted by generous friends of the conservatory. At the reception guests enjoy cocktails, hors d'oeuvres and a performance by Edwina Li and Margaret Li of the conservatory piano faculty. When guests arrive at the reception the mystery of their dinner destinations is solved as guests receive their "assignments" to one of eight host homes.

The following people have graciously volunteered to host dinner parties: Harriet and Stephen Baker, Dawn and Ed D'Alelio, Jane and Jon Davis, Kate and Jack Dickerson, Ayca and Scott Gazelle, Debbie and Lincoln Rathnam, Carolyn and Bill Schrader and Elizabeth and Derek Spence.

Proceeds from the evening (and a similar event in Duxbury the preceding weekend) support educational programs and scholarships of South Shore Conservatory. Tickets at $50 per person are available at the Conservatory or by calling Lanci Valentine at 781-749-7565, ext. 23.

Parent wants to keep program accountable

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Andrew Quigley is on a crusade.

He's trying to illuminate the parents of schoolchildren in Cohasset as to what they are entitled to from the school system. Quigley, the father of a special needs childn, said he has been wronged by the Cohasset School District and he has gone to the state Department of Education to try and correct the problems.

In the modern school department, special education is no longer defined by children with physical disabilities or mental retardation. Special education needs can range from a minor reading problem to a combination of physical and emotional disabilities, or cerebral palsy. No matter what the disability, or how minor, under state law Cohasset must still educate that child.

According to Steve Kaplan, director of special education for Cohasset, there are currently 272 students (about 19 percent) who qualify for special education. Once a student is qualified for special education a team meeting with both parents and school administrators is scheduled.

The DOE has said a school district must produce, at minimum, a draft Individual Education Plan, or IEP, at team meetings. These plans define the goals and objectives of the student and summarize the help that will be given to the student. The final IEP must be delivered to the parents of the special needs child immediately following the Team meeting. And this is were Quigley's problems begin.

"There has never been a case were a child did not receive the services they needed."

Steve Kaplan, Director of Special Education

After two team meetings, two delayed IEP deliveries, and two rejected IEP's Quigley submitted a complaint to the DOE. It should be noted that Kaplan was not able to comment on specific cases because he is bound by confidentiality agreements.

In his complaint Quigley alleged that:

- Proper notice of a Team meeting was not given to the speech therapist, a vital team member
- The Cohasset School District failed to produce a completed IEP within the state regulated time frame
- The Cohasset School District did not forward to the Bureau of Special Education Appeals a rejected IEP within the state regulated time frame
- The Cohasset School District failed to provide the lease restrictive environment for their son
- The Cohasset School District failed to implement or amend the IEP in reference to physical therapy and occupational therapy
- The Cohasset School District made decisions concerning placement without a team meeting.

In its ruling on Sept. 21, the DOE found that the Cohasset School District was in violation of only one of the issues. The DOE investigated Cohasset Public Schools and found that it did not adhere to the regulation of producing the IEP's in a timely fashion. The report noted other issues had been resolved and dealt with in a mediation session which resulted in a verbal agreement.

"I have no tolerance for public servants who don't adhere to regulations."

Andrew Quigley, Jerusalem Road resident

The DOE said that for its verification purpose, "The Cohasset Public Schools must submit an activity log indicated by student initials, evaluation dates, notification dates, IEP meeting dates, and signed or rejected IEP dates." The DOE requested that the log be submitted before Nov. 15.

Kaplan said he saw no problem with this reuqest. "This is not something that is unusual in the field of special education. There has never been a case were a child did not receive the services they needed," he said.

Kaplan went on to explain that the Cohasset School System has already implemented an action plan to correct the problem. He said they now give parents a summary page of the IEP at the conclusion of the Team meetings and starting in January, they hope to be able to submit the entire document after the meeting.

Quigley said he understand that Kaplan is understaffed so the delivery of the IEPs may be delayed, however, he has no patience when it comes to them being wrong. "Kaplan needs to remember that the team writes the IEP not him alone. I have no tolerance for public servants who don't adhere to regulations," Quigley said.

Quigley hopes the issue is resolved and wants parents to realize what their rights are. He wants parents to know that through the Parent Advisory Council one can help to shape their child's special education program. "The PAC should be involved in this," Quigley said.

says the center is perfect for his needs. "It's so convement, there's more machines then I ever imagined," he said.

The center is run by the recreation department and most of the equipment was either donated or came out of the school budget. The membership money goes into a recreation department revolving fund used to maintain the exercise machines and pay the $15 an hour to have a supervisor on-site.

DeLorenzo encourages people, who are new to working out, to join the center. He said he is willing to help set up programs for first-time users.

The fitness center is open to the public on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 5:30-7:30 p.m. and on Saturdays from 8:30-10:30 a.m. These hours will remain in effect until more people are registered, at which time the center will be open for expanded hours.

The fee is $30 a month per person and registration is at the fitness center. Enter the front door to the right side of the main entrance at CMHS. Worley said folks are encouraged to signup for two months although 30-day memberships will be accepted.

"If membership gets to 20, we can open the center up another night," Worley said. "Ideally, we'd like to keep it open every night."

Jack DeLorenzo works out on the bench press while Allison DeLorenzo uses the stair-master and Dan Tarpey lifts the free weights at the fitness center.

Ideas for new community playground welcome

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPHO-SMITH

HALLOWEEN'S COMING

Hello Cohasset. Halloween is coming and it is definitely in the air! The leaves are falling, the air is cooler and ghosts, witches and goblins are everywhere. Please make sure to watch out for all the Trick or Treaters on Wednesday as you drive around town and take a few minutes beforehand to remind your little goblins about Halloween safety rules.

GIRL SCOUT PARTY

A fantastic Girl Scout Halloween party was held for all Cohasset scouts last Friday and it was great! Hats off to all the people who were involved in the planning of this event, it is times like these that really show what teamwork can do.

GET WELL WISHES

I also want to send out a general "Get-Well" soon wish to all of the readers and residents here in town who are battling a wide range of illnesses. It seems like the list this week went on and on. If you are someone who is "under the weather" and you are reading this, please know that we are thinking of you and if you need anything, let a friend, family member or neighbor know. In these uncertain times, it is really important for us all to work on community support and togetherness and if you can help a person in need, that is wonderful.

COMMUNITY FLAG

Calling all hands, big and small! On Saturday, Nov. 10, from 10 am-7 p.m. The South Shore Art Center is holding a Community Art Project and Holiday Marketplace and all are encouraged to attend and participate. This is a day and event that none of us should miss. Come help make a giant community flag! This artful interpretation of Old Glory will use handprints of participants for its form and color. The flag will be completed on this one day, will hang at the Art Center and will then be on display in various locations throughout the South Shore. By spreading the word and all coming out to support this great effort, our town wide spirit will be on display!

While you are here for the flag making, you may also shop at the Holiday Marketplace, a one-day craft fair featuring a select number of crafters from the Art Center's annual Festival on the Common. All work is small and priced for holiday giving. The Small Works exhibition in the Dillon Gallery will offer for sale the works of many of the Center's Gallery Artists.

PLAYGROUND IDEAS

Playground ideas anyone? As you may know by now, the playground at the Old Osgood has been taken down, a move that I am so relieved to see. As I have heard from so many, this is a sore subject to discuss around town due to some who were for this and many who were against it.

To me, the bottom line was that we had a terrific playpark that had been made by many wonderful and dedicated volunteers. Over the years, the playground had not been maintained and was showing way more than normal wear and tear. Having been at the playground myself on many occasions and witnesses several accidents that should not have been happening, it was very apparent to me that it had gone beyond a quick repair. The question now becomes, where, what and how do we find a suitable alternative.

A committee has been formed at the South Shore Community Center Nursery School to brainstorm on ways to make the playground their a community-based play park. Please call Trish Hart with ideas, comments or thoughts that you may have. Also, please feel free to send any questions, comments, thoughts or ideas on alternative space for a play park to this column. I was one of the people involved when the Osgood Playpark was made and feel that a community like ours could work together again on some other possibilities.

PARTYING MOOD

MAKING A DIFFERENCE

Here is a great example of town wide support. This Saturday, Oct. 27 from 9 am-3 p.m., is "Make A Difference Day" and you can be a part of this fantastic day. The Cohasset Osgood PSO, Deer Hill PSO, Osgood School Council and The Cohasset Soccer Club have banded together to Make A Difference by hosting a bake sale at Milliken Field on Saturday. Please come by to purchase some delicious treats, grab a hot dog, some popcorn and drinks and while you are there, purchase some great artwork made by the students of the Osgood and Deer Hill schools.

Also available for sale will be some Red, White and Blue "Power" jellybeans or a Red, White and Blue gimp key chain. The proceeds of this wonderful event will be donated to the Fund For Public Schools-WTC School Relief Fund. I think that this is such a strong way for all of us as families to make a difference to the children who were so directly impacted by the Tragedies that unfolded on September 11.

Please make sure to support this effort either before or after a soccer game or just by stopping at the field. Parking is available at Alumni Field and it is just a quick hop, skip and a big jump to get to Milliken Field from there. If anyone out there would like to donate some delicious baked goods, you may drop them off at the entrance of the Osgood School on Friday, Oct. 26. If you have any questions, call Jody Golden at 383-2685 or Dawn Gideon-Murphy at 383-1524.

'Playathon' benefit

On Saturday, Oct. 27, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., at the First Parish Church, music students from all over the South Shore will be sharing their talents to benefit a good cause—the homeless shelters at Pine Street Inn and Rosie's Place in Boston.

Sponsored by the South Shore Music Teachers Association, a professional organization of independent music teachers, this is the second annual "playathon" to be held on the South Shore. Last year's event raised more than $3,000, all of which was sent to the two shelters.

More than 70 students representing the studios of 10 teachers, are planning to get pledges in advance and will perform, in costume, throughout the day. At the same time, First Parish will hold its annual Harvest Fair, complete with food, children's activities and great buys.

The public is invited to both the Halloween Playathon and the Harvest Fair, free of charge.

For information, call South Shore Music Teachers Association member, Olive Mullen at 781-383-1993.

Paragon fall hours

The new fall hours at Paragon Carousel are Wednesday mornings, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Fridays, 3-6 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays, 11 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Adults and kids (ages 14 and up) are invited to roll up their sleeves and volunteer in one of 20 work projects across the state. Locally, volunteers are needed in Hingham and Cohasset to walk the shoreline at World's End and remove debris. For information regarding The Trustees of Reservations, call 978-921-1944 or visit online at www.thetrustees.org.

Exploring movement

The Cohasset Recreation and Cohasset High School come together during a project for community service.

Three high school juniors, Shawna Sullivan, Sarah Dennis and Bryan Bilton, will run a Movement Exploration for ages 4 and 5. These volunteered services will help the children develop their motor skills and basic social skills. It will also provide an opportunity for parents to drop their youngsters off and run a few errands without having to entertain the children.

The program will run on a rotating schedule as follows: Nov. 3 - 9:15 to 10:10 a.m.; Nov. 9 - 10:50 to 11:40 a.m.; Nov. 13 - 9:15 to 10:10 a.m.; Nov. 19 - 10:50 to 11:40 a.m.; Nov. 29 - 10:50 to 11:40 a.m.

WILLIAMS SOCCER

Cohasset's Steff Noering leads the red-hot Ephs to a six-game shut out streak as they get ready for the NESCAC semi-finals this weekend. It all started with a 2-0 victory over undefeated league leader Middlebury where Steff, a junior at Williams College, shot both goals.

Six shut out games later, she scored again two goals and had an assist as Williams beat Wesleyan in the quarterfinals this past Sunday. Wish them luck as they take on Bowdoin on Saturday in Middlebury. We all certainly wish you tremendous luck Steff, keep up the great work.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Pride, patriotism, and etiquette

When Betsy Ross put the first stitch on the American flag she probably had no idea of what an enduring symbol it would become.

Few times in our American history has the flag held more importance than right now in our country as we stare boldly in the face of terrorism. The flag has come to symbolize so much more since Sept. 11: pride, power, unity, strength, just to name a few. No time in recent memory have we seen such a display of the red, white and blue, defiantly waving in the face of unthinkable acts against our country.

As we have reported in recent weeks patriotism is at an all-time high. Stores and factories can't keep up with the demand for American flags. We see them everywhere — on cars, draped across houses and blowing in the breeze along the highways. It is truly remarkable, something to fill all of us with hope and inspiration.

But as we continue to exhibit our patriotism with renewed fervor, it is important to remember some rules of flag etiquette. Traveling the South Shore we can't help but notice many of the flags are looking ragged and torn. Several placed along Route 3 overpasses have become torn to shreds from the winds whipping across the highway. A South Shore yard displayed a large flag that at one time must have been taut as it was hung, but now it droops and part of it drags on the ground.

And while we applaud one resident for their sense of patriotism we do have to question whether a flag draped over a dumpster used for reconstruction debris is the best use for Betsy Ross' handiwork. In the spirit of patriotism, we offer some etiquette reminders for displaying the American flag and continue to encourage all residents to proudly show their red, white and blue.

The following information is taken from ushistory.org. To learn more history and etiquette about the flag and its creator, check out the website where there is a homepage on Betsy Ross:

• When the flag is displayed over the middle of the street, it should be suspended vertically with the union to the north in an east and west street or to the east in a north and south street.

• The flag of the United States of America, when it is displayed with another flag against a wall from crossed staffs, should be on the right, the flag's own right (that means the viewer's left), and its staff should be in front of the staff of the other flag.

• The flag, when flown at half-staff, should be first hoisted to the peak for an instant and then lowered to the half-staff position. The flag should be again raised to the peak before it is lowered for the day. By "half-staff" is meant lowering the flag to one-half the distance between the top and bottom of the staff. Crepe streamers may be affixed to spear heads or flagstaffs in a parade only by order of the President of the United States.

• When flags of States, cities, or localities, or pennants of societies are flown on the same halyard with the flag of the United States, the latter should always be at the peak. When the flags are flown from adjacent staffs, the flag of the United States should be hoisted first and lowered last. No such flag or pennant may be placed above the flag of the United States or to the right of the flag of the United States.

• When the flag is suspended over a sidewalk from a rope extending from a house to a pole at the edge of the sidewalk, the flag should be hoisted out, union first, from the building. The flag should never be allowed to touch the ground.

• When the flag is used to cover a casket, it should be so placed that the union is at the head and over the left shoulder. The flag should not be lowered into the grave or allowed to touch the ground.

• When the flag is displayed in a manner other than by being flown from a staff, it should be displayed flat, whether indoors or out. When displayed either horizontally or vertically against a wall, the union should be uppermost and to the flag's own right, that is, to the observer's left. When displayed in a window it should be displayed in the same way, that is with the union or blue field to the left of the observer in the street. When festoons, rosettes or drapings are desired, bunting of blue, white and red should be used, but never the flag.

• The flag of the United States should be at the center and at the highest point of the group when a number of flags of States or localities or pennants of societies are grouped and displayed from staffs.

• When displayed from a staff in a church or public auditorium, the flag of the United States should hold the position of superior prominence, in advance of the audience, and in the position of honor at the clergyman's or speaker's right as he faces the audience. Any other flag so displayed should be placed on the left of the clergyman or speaker or to the right of the audience.

• It is the universal custom to display the flag only from sunrise to sunset on buildings and on stationary flagstaffs in the open. However, when a patriotic effect is desired, the flag may be displayed twenty-four hours a day if properly illuminated during the hours of darkness.

• The flag should not be draped over the hood, top, sides, or back of a vehicle or of a railroad train or a boat. When the flag is displayed on a motorcar, the staff shall be fixed firmly to the chassis or clamped to the right fender.

Runway response

TO THE EDITOR:

In support of the proposed new runway at Logan, Massport's Barbara Platt and Director of Aviation Thomas Kinton are quoted in last week's Mariner article that overall delays will be reduced one-third, and that flights over the South Shore will not increase.

They are misinformed. Their own data, found in their Final Environmental Impact Review (FEIR), indicate that, even if the runway is built, delays will increase to 249,600 hours from the pre-Sept. 11 level of 148,000 hours. Additionally, overflights will increase to 200,000 annually, from 106,000 now, mostly from 75,000 additional low level arrivals on runway 33L.

In the response to the FEIR, submitted in June by the towns of Hull, Hingham and Cohasset in opposition to the runway, it was pointed out that jet fuel emissions, tons of which already rain down on the three towns every day, were understated by 150 percent, and noise energy levels an astonishing 900 percent.

Hull's Phil Lemnios points out that property values may fall by 10 percent if the runway is built. This may be an understatement. Declines of up to 20 percent are indicated in data from the FAA, Booz Allen (a leading consulting company), and European and Canadian studies. No-one wants to live under the roar of arriving and departing jets. His observation is simply common sense, and not a scare tactic. Buyers of property in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset will take air traffic into account in their purchase decisions. The evidence suggests that values will decline, or cease to rise as properties in pollution-free towns continue to increase in value.

Massport has asked the FAA to approve its FEIR. Once approved it can be put on the shelf, to be pulled off at any time in the future to permit the construction of the runway without further debate. While the decision to build the runway is on hold, the drive to gain FAA blessing is not, and is the reason Hull is proceeding with its suit. We have discovered that the errors and omissions in the FEIS are so egregious they suggest a deliberate intent to deceive, and rise to the level of fraud.

Fortunately courts both in California and Europe have recently recognized the merits of citizens' actions against airport noise and jet fuel pollution (Oakland,Calif. and London's Heathrow), providing precedent for favorable action by the Plymouth County court.

Schools welcome all

TO THE EDITOR:

As school superintendent, I am quite concerned with recent comments made in your newspaper regarding the discussion the Cohasset School Committee and I had recently regarding the proposed Avalon Bay Project.

I and the committee had been invited to react to the proposal by the town planner as to the potential impact such a venture may have on the schools, and that is all we did.

I merely presented to the committee the potential impact relative to increased student population, space, services and transportation. I viewed this as an objective analysis based upon 32 years of experience in education and planning for the future, relative to the growth in a town.

I and the committee were not asked, nor did we take a position on whether the project should be approved, and certainly did not state that we were opposed. To the contrary, I and the school committee welcome students of all abilities, regardless of socio-economic status as some have alluded to in the printed articles. We did not focus narrowly on this issue, but the articles have.

We, in the schools, and I believe in the community, are proud of all our children. We embrace the diversity we have and support students from all backgrounds.

It is unfortunate if some individuals have transferred their feelings on this issue to me and the committee when in fact, our intent was only to respond on the potential impact. I believe it is up to the community to respond to the project as to yea or naye.

The school doors are always open to all of our students, and we make no judgments on whom should or should not attend. We see all of our students as one, and do not single out or make stereotypes of any.

LIBRARY CORNER

Yearbooks wanted

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library has just received a gift of Cohasset High School yearbooks from 1989-2001. They will be cataloged and kept in the Archives for all to use. Yearbooks are an important local history item for local libraries to have but until now the library has not collected them. If you have any yearbooks that you would like to donate to the library, please bring them in.

Sports personality

On Sunday, Oct. 14, an appreciative audience of about 40 people attended the library's program featuring Bill Littlefield, National Public Radio's sports commentator. Littlefield is the host of "Only a Game," a weekly program produced by Boston's radio station, WBUR. After reading from several of his humorous pieces about baseball, golf and soccer, Littlefield spoke of the sometimes serendipitous mix of interviewing, research and inspiration needed to produce his show.

Bill Littlefield, Radio sports commentator, shares some anecdotes at a special library program.

Littlefield, the author of five books and a teacher at Curry College, then answered questions from the audience about his show and written works.

Library Director Janet Husband was pleased with the turnout. She hopes to do much more of this kind of programming at the new library, where an inviting meeting room and plenty of parking will provide an ideal setting.

Cohasset Dramatic club

On Thursday, Nov. 8, the Cohasset Dramatic Club will perform part of its current play, "The Best Christmas Pageant Ever." The performance will take place in the Children's Room of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library at 4 p.m. This performance is suitable for all members of the family and should last about one hour. Light refreshments will be served following the performance

Master Plan survey coming next week

MASTER PLAN

GROWTH & DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

"Big trees, sidewalks and friends!" is what a local five-year-old said when asked: What do you like most about Cohasset? The question is being posed to every registered voter in town next week in an important survey designed to build consensus on important issues to all residents. As we have spoken about in past weeks, the Selectmen have created this committee to help draft a town vision and hire the resources to build a master plan. This will eventually guide future plans and decisions for appropriate growth, effective transportation as well as infrastructure, education, and environmental protection. Towns such as Hingham, Norwell, Scituate and Duxbury have already completed this activity and are now implementing their plans based on their residents' visions.

The Town is sending a survey to every registered voter in town next week, so look for it and respond, because every voice counts in the future of Cohasset. We are including here a few facts about the town for you to consider as you ponder the future.

Community Profile

Population – As of the 2000 Census, the population in Cohasset totaled 7,261. Cohasset's population has increased 4 percent since 1970 (6,954-7,261). Average household size decreased 20 percent from 1970 to 2000 (3.34 to 2.69 persons) while median age is up 5.6 percent from 1990 to 40.9 years.

Growth –Cohasset's population is projected to increase by 4 percent, or to 7,537 persons by 2005, according to the Massachusetts Institute for Social and Economic Research (MISER). A recent study by the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs found that the population could increase as much as 37 percent if all land in Cohasset were built to maximum zoning.

Housing – Cohasset had 2,805 housing units according to the 2000 Census, an increase of 2.9 percent from 1990. According the Assessor's Office, approximately 86 percent of all homes are single family, 8 percent are condominiums and 6 percent are multifamily. The median sales price for a single-family home in Cohasset in 2000 was $420,000 according to Banker and Tradesman.

Zoning – Approximately 80 percent of the town is zoned for housing, 7 percent is zoned for commercial development and 13 percent is zoned as open space. Residential zoning requires 50 feet of frontage on an approved way and 18,000 to 60,000 square feet of land for each new house lot. Commercial zoning requires from zero to 80,000 square feet of land per development. The Water Resources and Special Floodplain and Watershed Protection Districts control development near water and wetland resources.

Town Budget –In fiscal 2000, Cohasset's municipal budget was $20,792,165. Education (42 percent) and public safety (13 percent) were the top budget expenditures. The remaining funds went to general services such as water, parks, public works, and town administration.

Education –Cohasset Public school enrollment was 1,249 in 1999/2000. Per pupil expenditure that year was $6,921 as compared to the state average of $6,692. According to the School Department, Cohasset has a student teacher ratio of 9:1 and 93 percent of graduating students pursue higher education.

Governance – Cohasset operates under the town manager form of local government with an open town meeting and five member elected Board of Selectman.

Municipal Services – The town provides: police, fire, ambulance, harbormaster, partial sewering, water (except North Cohasset, served by MA Amer. Water), a waste recycling/transfer facility, elder affairs, low-income senior housing, inspectional services, recreational programs and public works.

Open Space and Natural Resources – Cohasset has a unique and diverse natural environment with ledge, marsh, woods and water that supports a wide range of species. 30 percent of all land in Cohasset is protected open space.

Historic and Cultural Resources – Cohasset Common, Government Island and the Lothrop and Gropius homes are each listed on the National Register of Historic Places. The Common, Little Harbor, Mill River Marine, Beechwood Village and many other areas are both historically and culturally significant features of town.

Water – Mass American Water supplies Water in North Cohasset. Water for the rest of the town comes from Lily Pond and is supplemented by the Aaron River Reservoir. The Reservoir can safely yield up to 3.5 million gallons per day (average usage for the past 10 years has been around 700,000 gallons per day).

The Cohasset Growth & Development Committee: Clark Brewer, Tom Callahan, Debbie Cook, Bill Good, Elizabeth Harrington, Patti Keville, Ronnie McMorris, Peter Pratt, Rick Swainborg and Michael Westcott.

A museum for Elian?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see where they're planning to make a museum out of the rented white stucco house on Northwest Second Street in Miami, where Elian Gonzalez spent five months of his young life.

Oh, goody! Just in time to give a lift to Janet Reno's campaign for governor of Florida.

Janet, you will remember, was the attorney general who sent the jack-booted thugs of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, armed with machine guns, and probably mortars and Scud missiles, too, to kidnap the 6-year-old Elian and send him back to slavery in Fidel Castro's Cuban sugar plantation.

Or so they tell it in the Little Havana section of Miami, where Castro and Reno rank just below Osama bin Laden in the popularity polls.

The new museum, we are told, will feature a display case with Elian's toys, now treasured family heirlooms purchased at WalMart in 1999, and a poster photo of a federal agent, armed with enough firepower to take on the Taliban, capturing the little boy at gun point.

It's the kind of display case that used to show off the gun with which John Wilkes Booth shot President Lincoln from the grassy knoll in Ford's Theater in Washington — if it had the historic significance of Barney the Green Dinosaur once handled by Elian, that is.

At the time Elian lived there, from December 1999 through April 2000, the house was rented by great uncle Lazaro Gonzalez, his wife, Angela, and his daughter, Marisleysis. They moved out shortly after Elian was seized by the Feds. Last November, another great uncle, Delfin Gonzalez, purchased the house for $80,000. It is Delfin who is turning it into a shrine to Elian.

"He is going to keep it exactly as it was when Elian was there," said Armando Gutierrez, a spokesman for the Gonzalez family. They are suing the government for using excess force in executing arrest and search warrants at the home.

The November date is important because it was exactly a year ago last November that little Elian was found floating on an inner tube in the waters off Florida after his mother and her boy friend died in a shipwreck while trying to flee Castro's island. The fisherman, Donato Dalrymple, who discovered him is suing the government, too.

Elian went back to Cuba in June to live with his father, Juan Miguel Gonzalez, and his stepmother, in Cardenas, Cuba, 90 miles east of Havana. He has virtually disappeared. He attends the Marcelo Salado Primary School, protected by three plain clothed officers who shoo away reporters attempting to interview him or those around him.

One wonders if he will be able to attend the opening of the Elian Gonzalez Museum in Miami, 90 miles away across the strait that claimed the life of his mother, and play with his Barney the Green Dinosaur once again.

HEALTH NOTES

Health board updated on bio-attack procedures

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The more we see of the infrastructure of the nation's Public Health Service, the more reassured we can be that we have a quality organization. For example, last week, all local Boards of Health received extensive data about upcoming news releases relating to recognition and coping with illnesses associated with the intentional release of a biologic agent. These information packets were extremely useful in providing local health-care providers with facts, information and procedures for protecting citizens from bio-attack. They covered procedures for such things as mail processing, indications of a biologic attack, identification of symptoms of unusual illnesses, etc. Information and organization are there for us to cope with bioterrorism. If we're calm and avoid hysteria, the effects of such activity will be negligible for most of us.

More water quality monitoring

Occasionally, there is unwarranted criticism about the quality of the data volunteers collect. This is often because there is a lack of understanding about the objectives of volunteer programs. At least half of the reason for volunteers taking data from the environment is to make them more connected with the ecosystem around them so they can live in more harmony within it.

Those who merely pay to have their trash carted away are not bad people, but they also are not learning about the magnitude of the nation's growing waste disposal problem. It would be hard to recycle and not begin to understand the scope of the solid waste issue. Similarly, taking water-quality data will surely bring home the mounting problems, which growth is bringing us.

One Board of Health initiative is aimed at convincing the State that pollution is up in Little Harbor. This will be done by local residents taking water samples after rain events. Even now, at the end of the first week of the program, initial data shows pollution at one site in Little Harbor slightly less than 75 times that for a healthy estuary, and somewhat more than five times the level which would be safe for swimming. The local volunteers will continue to take these data, and we will continue reporting, and many will, hopefully, learn what unmediated growth is doing to our town.

In another volunteer program, on Tuesday Oct 16, eight Cohasset High School students and three teachers spent the day at TPMC, an environmental engineering firm in Scituate. The group was joined by Cohasset's Health Agent, Dr. Joseph Godzik, Board of Health Chair, Steve Bobo, Steve Ivas, environmental scientist, and Jeff Donze, cartographer and Cohasset resident (and CHS graduate) employed by TPMC. The group convened for a full day of work at TPMC in order to accomplish three goals:

- To assess and analyze data from field work done to date
- To map out the process of writing a scientific report that can meet the rigors of professional scientific review; and to begin that process
- To become familiar with the environmental mapping software programs used by TPMC in its environmental consulting work such that this software may be used by the students in their final report

The day was highly productive. All goals were clearly met. The opportunity to meet off-campus, and to work without interruption in a professional setting alongside professional consultants and town officials, was invaluable. And from this the Town will receive valuable reports about Little Harbor, Cohasset Cove and a new group of people who understand the importance of gathering good data about their environment.

For more information please call Judy Fitzsimmons, the Public Health Nurse at 781-383-2210

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

Responding to concerns about anthrax

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health (MDPH) in conjunction with the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), offer the following guidelines for use in responding to questions about anthrax threats, unknown contamination of items or management of individuals concerned about potential exposure.

Advice to the public

- Anthrax does not present an immediate threat of injury.
- Exposure to anthrax does not necessarily mean infection.
- Anthrax is not spread from one person to another person.
- If it is determined that there is exposure, infection can be prevented.
- All reported incidents have and will be investigated.
- To date, no anthrax has been found in Massachusetts.

If a letter, package, or object is of known origin (i.e. it is a usual or expected item from a known business or individual), conforms with the characteristics of normal mail, is not accompanied by any written or verbal threats, and contains no powdery substance, there is little or no health risk. There is no need to contact health or law enforcement officials.

If a letter, package or object is of known origin (i.e. it is a usual or expected item from a known business or individual), is not accompanied by any written or verbal threat, and some particulate matter is found in or around it, the health risk is low. There is no need to contact health or law enforcement officials. If there is a question, the MDPH information line is available at 1-866-627-7968.

If a letter, package or object contains a powdery substance and/or a written or verbal threat the following is advised:

1. Do not shake or empty the contents of any suspicious envelope or package; do not try to clean up powders or fluids.
2. Place the envelope or package in a plastic bag or some other type of container to prevent leakage of contents.
3. If you do not have any container, then cover the envelope or package with anything (e.g., clothing, paper, trashcan, etc.) and do not remove this cover.
4. Leave the room and close the door, or section off the area to prevent others from entering (i.e., keep others away).
5. Wash your hands with soap and water to prevent spreading any powder to your face or skin.
6. If you are at home, then report the incident to local law enforcement or call 911. If you are at work, then notify your building security official or an available supervisor.
7. If possible, list all people who were in the room or area when this suspicious letter or package was recognized. Give this list to both the local public health authorities and law enforcement officials for follow-up investigations and advice.
8. If clothing or articles of clothing become contaminated with powder, carefully remove the clothes and keep them in a plastic bag until you are notified of results of testing.
9. If you have body or clothing exposure to a suspect material, then shower with soap and water as soon as possible. Do not use bleach or disinfectant on your skin.
10. Do not transport suspicious or contaminated material to the police, fire, or health department yourself.
11. Do not bring suspicious or contaminated material to the hospital, clinic, or doctor's office.

Bird behavior — at times unexpected, unusual

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Simply put, bird behavior is anything birds do. Feeding habits, methods of getting around, survival techniques, and courtship, breeding and nesting activities are all aspects of behavior. The specifics of these behaviors vary from species to species or even between individuals. Some actions are related to a bird's specific anatomical design. For instance, the size and type of beak determines the kind of food a bird eats. The design of a bird's foot, including the number and arrangement of toes, the amount of webbing, or the type of claw will determine how a bird moves, or sits, or catches food. Behavioral traits are often good clues to identification.

Unexpected nesting places

All birds need a place to lay their eggs, but some choose rather unlikely spots. For instance, knowing that ducks swim, and generally live in a water environment, would we expect Wood Ducks to nest in tree cavities, sometimes not even very near the water? Probably not, but that is what they do. They also will use man-made birdhouses. When my children were small, they thought I couldn't be right when I called them to look at the duck (a Wood Duck) sitting high up in our backyard elm tree!

Belted Kingfishers have large heads and bills, but short legs and small feet, making them somewhat awkwardly proportioned. Although they are land birds, they dive for fish, in addition to eating insects and tadpoles. They do not build nests in trees or bushes like other passerines, but excavate burrows in banks beside rivers or lakes to lay their eggs. Most burrows are 1-3 feet long, some are as much as 6 feet long, and a few have been found to be 10-15 feet in length. In a new burrow, eggs are laid directly on the ground; in previously used burrows, eggs are laid on debris, such as fish bones and scales left over from former years.

Herons and egrets are large birds, some species being very large. Common sense would suggest that such large birds would not try to nest in the tops of trees, and yet that is exactly what they do. Great Blue Herons will nest up to 130 feet above the ground.

Sleep phenomena

You may wonder how birds that perch on a branch can sleep without falling off. The answer lies with special flexor tendons in their legs. When a bird crouches on a branch, its legs flex, or bend, which causes the toes to close. With the toes grasping the branch, the rest of the bird can relax and sleep. When the bird extends its legs in order to fly off, the toes open.

Birds can also sleep with one eye open and one half of the brain awake. This behavior, known as "unihemispheric slow-wave sleep" allows the bird to stay alert to approaching predators while grabbing some needed rest at the same time.

Scientists at the University of Chicago have studied the electrical brain activity of Zebra Finches during sleep. They found that neurons are fired in the same patterns during sleep as when the birds sing during the day. They believe this is because the birds are rehearsing songs in their sleep.

Use of tools

We don't usually think of birds as being tool users. However, a few birds do use tools, mostly birds not found in North America. The Brown-headed Nuthatch found in Louisiana and other southern states is a regular user of tools, however. It chips off a small piece of pine bark that it uses in its beak to pry off more pieces of bark in order to find insects hiding underneath.

"Bait-fishing" is different type of tool use. Several kinds of herons, especially the Green Heron will use bread crumbs or insects to lure fish, which they then catch. It is not clear whether this is a learned response from observing that the bread fed to ducks by humans sometimes attracts fish, or whether this is a genetic trait, given that most of the birds employing this tactic are from the same family.

William Davis reported a variation of this in "Bird Observer" in 2000. He watched a Tri-colored Heron follow a Double-crested Cormorant as it swam back and forth in a zigzag pattern along the shore. The heron followed along and attacked fish being stirred up by the cormorant. In other words, the heron was using the cormorant as a "beater"

Unusual Diets

A woman in New Hampshire found that Blue Jays were suddenly chipping white paint off her house and eating it. In order to divert them, she tried offering oyster shells, sand, dirt and trace minerals. None of these worked, but eggshells finally did the trick. Offering two to three cups of eggshells a day would keep them from eating her paint. If snow covered up the eggshells, they would go back to eating the paint. It seems paint contains calcium in the form of calcium carbonate. Further investigation by the Lab of Ornithology at Cornell showed that this was not an isolated case. Their studies show that Blue Jays do choose paint over other sources of grit, except for eggshells. They also consume more than twice as much calcium as other species. They continue eating calcium into the fall, unlike other species which just eat extra calcium during egg-laying season. Paint chipping seems to be a more prevalent behavior in the northeast than other parts of the country. Perhaps this is because northeastern soils are low in calcium due to leaching by acid rain. If you offer birds eggshells, they should first be boiled for ten minutes to remove any salmonella, then cooled and crushed and set out in a shallow dish or feeding tray.

A report by Richard Hildreth in "Bird Observer" in 1999 tells of European Starlings catching tent caterpillars in the advanced hairy stage. Most birds give up eating them once they get too hairy. Hildreth watched as the starlings rubbed the caterpillars on the pavement until the hairs were removed. After the hairs were removed, they either ate the insects or carried them off to a nest.

As much as 50 percent of the stomach contents of Horned or Pied-billed Grebes may be feathers. Scientists trying to find an explanation for why grebes eat so many feathers hypothesize that grebes do not have a gizzard strong enough to crush fish bones. Feather balls could protect the stomach from sharp bones until the digestive process dissolves the bones. It is not understood why grebes have not evolved a digestive tract capable of dealing with bones without filling it with feathers.

As more and more birders observe bird behavior carefully, more unusual behaviors are being reported. As this happens, we may find that some of these behaviors are more common than we realized.

Town hopes for a sweet time this year

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

It's that time of the year when dentists can start planning elaborate vacations. Halloween is nearly upon us.

A beloved holiday by sweet-tooths of all ages — Halloween is a time when everyone can succumb to the guilty pleasure of chocolate.

But local officials and police hope the occasional toothache will be the only problem on Oct. 31.

Halloween has been a nightmare in years past, with throngs of teens wreaking havoc on the town. Two years ago, youths vandalized village storefronts, broke windows at the Osgood School, egged and dented police cruisers and stole candy from young trick-or-treaters. And two years before that, the village provided the setting for another similarly ugly scene.

Things were quiet last year – and the town hopes to keep it that way.

For children a little too old to go knocking on doors, again this year there will be a dance on Halloween night from 7-10 p.m. at The Garage behind the Red Lion Inn. The dance, sponsored by the Cohasset Youth Resources Committee, is open to all children in the sixth grade and up. Costumes are optional, though there will be prizes for the most creative.

"Last year we opened on Halloween and had a good response," said Recreation Department director Jack Worley, who also serves on the Cohasset Youth Resources Committee. "It provides an alternative to hanging around in the streets."

Local officials and police hope the occasional toothache will be the only problem on Oct. 31.

Although Police Chief Brian Noonan expects a quiet Halloween, said he will have extra personnel on as a precaution. Noonan also said he has suggested that grocery stores don't sell large quantity of eggs to teens on Halloween eve.

In light of recent world events, Noonan said he hopes parents would be more aware where they take their children this year. He said it's always a good idea for children only to go to the houses of people they know.

"This is not a time to be dealing with strangers," he said. Noonan emphasized that the preferred hours for trick-or-treating are from 4-8 p.m.

The National Confectioners Association and the Chocolate Manufacturers Association have established the following safety tips to help make Halloween safe and enjoyable:

Wear light-colored clothing that's short enough to prevent tripping, and add reflective tape.

Make sure children can see well through face masks, or use make-up.

Adults should always accompany small children.

Go out in daylight and carry a flashlight in case of delay.

Stay within the neighborhood and only visit familiar homes.

Watch for traffic.

Only give and accept wrapped or packaged candy.

Examine all candy before allowing children to eat it.

Keep costumed children away from pets. The pet may not recognize the child and may become frightened.

Avoid hard plastic of wood props such as daggers or swords. Substitute with foam rubber which is soft and flexible.

Tampering with candy or any food is a federal crime, police said. Penalties range from a fine of $25,000 or imprisonment for attempting tampering to $100,000 and life imprisonment where tampering leads to death.

Parking planned panned

Oct. 30 at Town Hall to discuss the matter.

In a letter to selectmen, Worley said the news was "derived from one of our members during a slide presentation by the revitalization committee, only after her prodding and questioning of a specific slide."

"We find both the information and an obvious lack of desire to share the information with our committee very disturbing and less than forthcoming," Worley stated.

The Garage, which has been in operation for two years and serves grades 6 and older, came to fruition thanks to a small army of dedicated volunteers.

"We sunk $40,000 into the project," he said. "It was a major effort using a 60-year-old concrete building.

"We couldn't rally the people again, it was a tough project that took a lot out of everybody."

Rizzo disputes the fact the CRC hasn't been forthcoming about the parking idea.

"Nothing we do is in secret," he said. "Our Elm Street office is open for anyone to walk in and see the plans.

"We only brought the parking forward because there is a need to increase parking in the village."

He said there would be two options if the town wanted to go forward with additional parking. The first, a one-level parking area, would incorporate the existing teen center into the parking. The other would involve moving the teen center, Rizzo said, and constructing a two-level structure at the site. Both options would be expensive because ledge would have to be removed.

"There's is nothing definite and we're not advocating anything," Rizzo said. He said at a recent public forum on village improvements about 35 percent of those in attendance thought it was worthwhile to keep expanding village parking near the teen center on the table.

"The CRC has great respect for the time, energy and resources put forward by the many individuals who helped create the teen center," Rizzo added. "If the expanded parking ever progressed beyond the idea stage there should be no doubt that the Youth Resources Committee would be a critical partner in any future discussions or planning."

Surveying for harbor walkway

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, which is planning infrastructure improvements, has hired BSC Engineering to complete a detailed survey of the harbor area to get a better understanding of the location and dimensions of public land.

One of the primary goals of the harbor walkway project is to provide safe pedestrian access around the harbor's edge, reducing the present conflict between vehicles and pedestrians and cyclists — which often compete for the same sidewalk space, said Dean Rizzo, executive director of the CRC. CRC believes efficient delineation of existing land uses will provide enough space for independent sidewalk and parking areas separated by a curbing system.

Rizzo said survey work is scheduled to begin in a week or two and will be conducted primarily on public ways. However, during the field measuring there may be occasions when BSC will need to hold a measuring pole a few feet in from the street/sidewalk edge on private property.

Maritime school eyes old Hagerty house proved to be an ideal site to lodge and launch wooden rowing boats and teach the skills and traditions of the early lifeboat crews.

After six years, CMI has proved itself, Buckley says.

"CMI has proved itself to be an organization capable of carrying out its proposals," Buckley stated in a recent letter to Town Manager Mark Haddad. He said his proposal is "a kindred spirit" to Ulmer's vision of but is significantly less grand than a learning laboratory for genetic research. Buckley's vision for the expanded CMI includes working as "promoting maritime education and environmental stewardship of our coastal community."

In an interview at the boathouse last week, Buckley was busy preparing for Saturday's annual The Head of the Weir River Race, an open-water rowing race that features upwards of 30 boats and 150 rowers, who come from across New England and New York.

Twelve years ago Buckley was invited to go out with a group of rowers at the Hull Lifesaving Museum in the dead of winter and experienced the same invigoration as those men, who set out in lifeboats into oft-stormy seas to rescue those in trouble back in the 1800s and early 1900s.

"We had to chop our boat out of the icy water," he recalled. "It was 15 degrees outside, but I loved it."

Being outside, coupled with the teamwork and athleticism involved in rowing, instilled in Buckley a love for the sport that has evolved into CMI.

CMI also conducts summer classes and offers a rowing program at the middle-high school. The old clapboard boathouse, which originally stood on Government Island, is believed to be an old US Lighthouse Service building that served as a service station for Minot Light.

In a related matter, selectmen recently agreed to provide CMI with $4,500 for boathouse improvements from remaining Hagerty property money over objections of the Hagerty Committee. Buckley said the money to be used for a new roof, doors and walkway and would free CMI funds to enhance programs and equipment. The Hagerty Committee objected saying the money should be used for the Hagerty project that includes Mariners Park. But Town Manager Mark Haddad said the boathouse is part of the Hagerty property. Money was appropriated to the Hagerty account at the October 2000 Special Town Meeting, he said.

CMI rowers excel in Weir River race

High school rowers (trained and sponsored by the Cohasset Maritime Institute) competed in the Head of the Weir rowing race in Hull on Saturday. They placed first overall and they put down the fastest time of the day. They beat crews comprised of high-school rowers as well as crews comprised of adults. The winning crew was "stroked" by CHS senior Charlie Anderson, (rowing in the position of stroke oar); Dan Littauer, CHS senior who just began crew this fall season rowed in the three seat; Chris Tabela, a junior from Hull High School, rowed the two seat, and Ian Hickey, a CHS sophomore rowed "bow". The coxswain was CMI coach John Liffmann.

"Coach Liffmann trained the students well and their efforts during practice paid off," CMI director Jack Buckley said. The crew's winning time of 42: 45 must be close to a course record, he said.

CMI had a second boat, coxed by CHS graduate Bea Rankin (freshman who currently attends the University of Vermont and is a member of the crew team servings as coxswain for the women's novice A team). That boat was stroked by Alice Theilman, CHS freshman, with George Miller; Cohasset Middle Schooler, grade 8, rowing three seat; John McCarthy, Cohasset Middle Schooler, grade 7; and Kelly Stone, CHS senior and novice rower, who provided solid leadership from the bow position.

"This crew, comprised of two females and two males, performed admirably in their first competition," Buckley said. "It was great to see not only Kelly and Bea, two friends and two leaders on the water together in the same boat, but it was great to see the young rowers learning what crew competition is all about."

"Everyone had a great time and I know will be looking forward to more action on the water come spring, 2002," Buckley said.

A little Hagerty House history

From the Mariner files, submitted by David Wadsworth and Mary Hagerty.

John Eltman worked his way from Europe to Boston and eventually to Cohasset where he set up a boat manufacturing company [constructing lobster and luxury boats] in the 1920s and 1930s.

Eltman learned of old merchants' homes being torn down in the Boston Harbor area [along where Rowe's Wharf now stands] and had some of the nicer homes moved before any damage was done to them. These houses were unloaded by ship at Parker Avenue, the major access to the town by water. The former Cohasset Colonials showhouse [now known as the Hagerty house] was one such building.

Francis Hagerty summered in Egypt, Mass. and worked for Eltman in his Cohasset boatyard at 38 Parker Ave.

Hagerty bought an old shell manufacturing company in 1938 and operated this with Eltman on the waterfront property before World War II. [The deed from this period says Eltman and Hagerty were partners in this business].

Eltman died in 1942 and Hagerty, who was a naval architect, took over the company. After the war, Hagerty designed a kit for small sailboats called "sea shells," a seasonal business. After getting permission from the Museum of Fine Arts, Francis and his wife, Mary, produced home assembly kits for colonial furniture and their business flourished in the post-war years. The company once employed about 50 people.

Mary Hagerty eventually sold the business, which relocated away from the water, and subsequently she agreed to sell the property to the town back in 1993.

In 1995 as selectmen grappled with potential uses for the Hagerty house, Cohasset Harbor Marina expressed interest in the building hoping to turn it into a ship's chandlery. The town eventually leased the building to the Lobster Lab in 1998, a lease selectmen recently terminated because they say Kevin Ulmer did not meet the conditions of the lease in terms of building upkeep and fund-raising.

Jack Buckley, founder of the Cohasset Maritime Institute based at the boathouse on the Hagerty property, has a proposal before selectmen about using the first-floor of the building.

Selectmen have asked for ideas about what the public would like to see done with the Hagerty house, which will be an agenda item at their Nov. 13 meeting.

11-3-1 soccer team eyes high tourney seeding

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

On the surface, a 1-0 win over a team "on the bubble" like Harwich may not appear the most encouraging result from a team like Cohasset that aspires to surpass its sectional semifinal run of a year ago. However, coach Dave Nigro is paid to look well below the surface, and he likes what he sees.

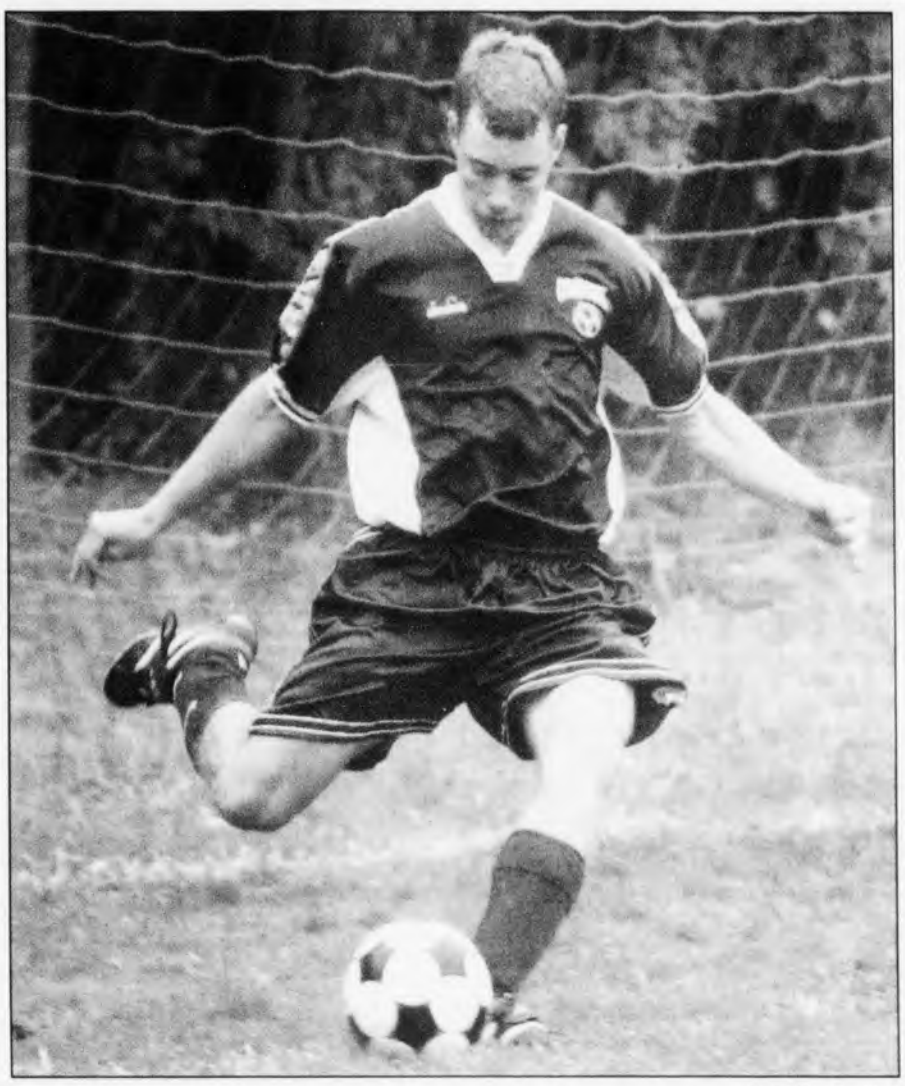
"We did pretty much what we wanted possessionally in that game, and in terms of creating rushes," said the second year coach. "We just couldn't score."

And this is a matter of circumstance to which Nigro has grown pretty much accustomed, if not accepting.

"It's been a struggle for us to finish around the net a lot this season," said the coach. "I see signs every now and then that we might be breaking through it, but sometimes it's a little frustrating."

All in all, however, the second-year coach of the 11-3-1 Skippers is pleased. He figures his team is in line for a high seeding when the brackets for the state tourney come out next week, with two home games being a distinct possibility.

Nigro figures the key at this point is honing what he's got: a team that plays a very strong possession and passing game and doesn't allow many scoring opportunities.



"I feel like things are coming together pretty well for us right now at a time you like to see that happening. Defensively, we're playing very well, and we're moving the ball well through midfield and creating rushes."

Cohasset boys soccer coach Dave Nigro

"We've got two games left to get ready for tournament and I think it's time to get everyone comfortable in their roles," said Nigro. "That's the focus right now."

This stated goal was evidenced by Nigro's decision to leave sweeper

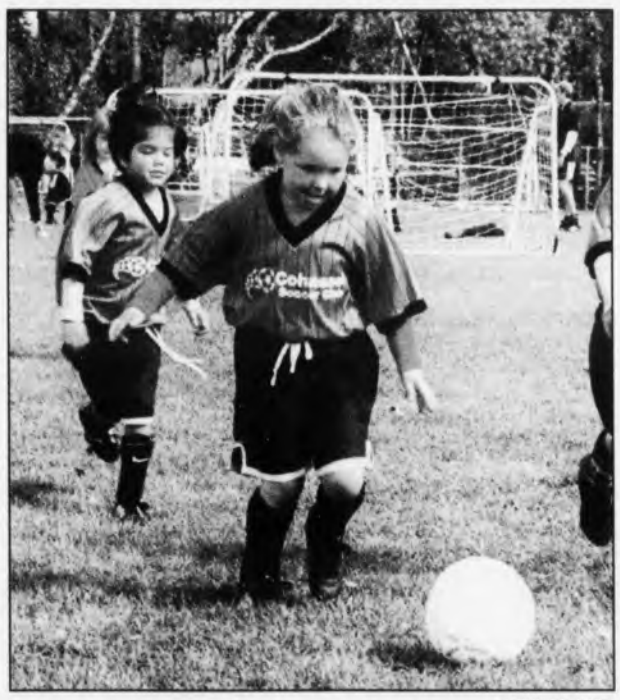
Carter down but not out

Injured three sport star still contributes from sidelines

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

When senior Carlie Carter hurt her knee for the first time last winter, no one on her team knew that it would be such a serious injury. But everyone knew how much her presence on the team would be missed.

Carter tore the ACL in her right knee during warm-ups before a gymnastics meet last January. The doctors diagnosed a minor tear, and Carter resumed her duties as a three-time All-Star captain to the SSL co-champion gymnastics squad.



But when she hurt the same knee falling off the bars a month later, the rest of her junior year looked grim, at least from an athletic standpoint.

Carter was forced to miss all but a few games of the lacrosse season, where she watched the Lady Laxers reach the playoffs for the first time. This left her the summer to strengthen her legs for the upcoming fall season, where she was named captain of the soccer team.

Unfortunately for Carter (and indeed the rest of her soccer team), the senior required surgery on Sept. 20. Now weeks removed from crutches, Carter has gotten into full swing physical therapy to rehab her knee as much as possible.

The recovery period prevents her from running for three months, and

Gridders stay perfect

Skippers go to 6-0 with 'ugly' 19-12 win over Norton

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Although it might not have been the easiest of their six wins, the Cohasset football Skipper racked up another W over Norton last Saturday. Cohasset improved to a perfect 6-0 with the 19-12 win, remaining in a tie for first place in the South Shore League with Abington.

For the second straight game, the Skippers' opponents provided them an early scare, as Norton connected for a long touchdown pass on just the third offensive play of the game.

Fourth year coach Tony Rolfe attributes the sluggish start to three possible factors: his team had just gotten off a longer than average bus ride, his juniors had spent the morning taking PSAT's, and this was their first game in over two weeks.

Lady Clippers go out in style

Playoff hopes gone, soccer team posts character building back-to-back wins

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

If the Cohasset girls soccer team proved anything this year, it was that they would not go down without a fight.

With the playoffs an impossibility, the Lady Skippers have made a neat little run to cap off the season, collecting two wins to get their record closer to respectability. The Lady Skippers beat Harwich last Friday, and put away non-league Holbrook last Tuesday.

The match against Holbrook pitted Cohasset, toward the bottom of the South Shore league against what appeared to be a powerhouse. Holbrook has spent the year demolishing the rest of the Mayflower league, romping its way to an 11-1 record.

But on Tuesday, Cohasset scored by far their highest goal total of the year, beating their hosts, 6-4. Sophomore Gillian Weber and junior Molly Flanagan each scored two goals, solidifying their place as the teams number one and number two scorers for the year.

Cohasset mixed up its formation against the slower Holbrook defense, adding another attacker to the forward line. Fourth year coach Deb Beal felt that this would encourage more breakaways from her quick forwards.

"The forward line is so goal hungry," she said. "Holbrook took some real chances on defense."

Seniors Maggie O'Neill and Becky Ross scored one goal apiece in their final road games as Cohasset soccer players.

The goal for O'Neill was her first of the season, odd since she was far and away the leading scorer of last year's squad. As a dominating force in the middle of

Tie to Mashpee ousts field hockey team from playoff contention

The game that ultimately bounced the Cohasset field hockey team from post-season consideration also seemed to serve as a microcosm for their entire season.

Too late, the Lady Skippers seemed to kick it into gear in Monday's 1-1 tie with Mashpee, as well as in the 2001 campaign.

After a scoreless first half—one of the "flattest of the year" for Cohasset, according to coach Deb Bostwick—the visiting Lady Falcons finally broke the ice at 26:26 of the second half on the deflection of a free hit.

This seemed to energize the host Skippers, and they notched the equalizer just over a minute later when a free hit from Kelly Hurley was rapped home by Jessie Guild.

From this point on, the Skippers dominated the play. However, they could not push another one past the Mashpee keeper despite several promising rushes.

Cohasset's best chance seemed to come in the waning seconds when a nice clearing pass presented a 3-on-1 rush. However, the final whistle blew just as the three forwards were closing in on the goal.

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Yes, I was one of those sports geeks who started tuning in to WEEI right from the beginning.

Naturally, I loved all the sports talk, but, to be honest, it didn't take long for the initial luster to wear off.

Quite frankly, the modus operandi of a few of the hosts began to sour me pretty quickly. I got tired of listening to the same voices go on and on and on with the same spin on the same three or four "hot" topics. I especially grew weary of all the callers who dropped their dimes in the interest of simply echoing the hosts well worn sentiments.

Most grating of all was the fact that only these kinds of callers seemed welcome. All too often, even the more articulate and well reasoned of the phoning in dissenters would be interrupted before they could come even close to completing their points, or talked over, or boisterously ridiculed, or straight out insulted or, worse yet, simply hung up on.

Of course, it wouldn't seem right (Sarandis) in this forum (Mustard) for me to name names (Ordway) of those to whom I'm referring. That is not the purpose (Andelman) of this little offering.

Simply suffice it to say that it didn't take long before the tape collection in my car started building.

Sure, I still listened from time to time, mostly before or after some big sports going on, but my general impression of sports talk in Boston was that a few self aggrandized air bags were getting the opportunity to hide behind this alleged "caller driven" format.

I don't know exactly when Butch from the Cape placed his first call, but I do remember my reaction the first time I heard that gravely voiced, tongue-in-cheek diatribe against all things Boston sports.

I think what stood out in my mind almost immediately is that he was the only one speaking. There was no over-talking or countering disparagement; the host or hosts (whoever they were), had it zipped up, displaying uncharacteristic good judgment.

In an eloquent and biting, eminently brilliant two- or three-minute rant, Butch, as near as I can recall, took down the Celtics, Bruins, Red Sox AND Patriots a few pegs. He represented these franchises at their worst, and there was a big enough kernel of truth behind all he said so that I — a long suffering Celtics, Bruins, Red Sox and Patriots fan — was insulted, even angered...most of all, though, I was entertained.

And I kept listening, not only to the remainder of this call, but to the station.

I was delighted to soon discover that callers were indeed driving much more of the dialogue than they once had. And from what I've since learned, Butch was the first one who was awarded any kind of real latitude. Contumacious characters such as "Al from Everett", "Angry Bill" and "Danny from Quincy" and Vincent (the Orioles fan) soon followed, but Butch was the true catalyst for making sports radio what it is in Boston today. In short, he taught these knuckleheads how to do their jobs. The result: where once it was struggling for its very survival, WEEI is now purportedly the number one rated sports station in the U.S.

People called simply to slam Butch or Al or Danny, and in numbers. Before you knew it, though, a four-hour show was in the books with nary a lull to recall. Say what you want, but that kind of theatre clearly has its appeal.

Butch got IT before anyone else. He had fun taking pokes at what is, after all, in so many ways, a pretty absurd landscape. And those who got IT had a lot of fun listening to it. Drew Bledsoe was "Nancy Drew" or "Drew Bozo", Nomar was "No-arm", Rick Pitino "Little Ricky" or (my personal favorite) "Coach Pinocchio". Mo Vaughn, of course, will never shake the Butchie-moniker of "Mo Money." Icons were summarily dissed just like that. It was silly, even sophomoric, but it was so much fun.

How many of you, like me, would arrive at a destination via car and wait for Butch to wrap up his harangue, or even remain right there for a promised upcoming Butch appearance? If I had a nickel for every time my wife looked out the window, dinner sitting on the table, at me sitting in the car...well, it probably wouldn't amount to all that much, but you get the point. It takes a lot to keep me from a warm dinner.

Suffice it to say that most of my audio cassettes are back in the house now, and my car radio is almost permanently tuned to EEI.

Last Wednesday morning, Thomas Speers—a.k.a. "Butch from the Cape—succumbed after a year long battle to cancer at the age of 58.

It may not seem appropriate to some, in light of everything else that's going on in this country right now, to devote this much space to the memory of former professional gambler and purported second-rate hood.

But sports radio has a comfortable niche in my life. It helps me escape briefly from the ultimately inescapable realities — such as the events of Sept. 11. Butch was always good for that, and for this simple pleasure he provided me, along certainly with too many others to count, I honor his memory. That's all.

Anyway, Butch had a legendary fondness for Guinness stout, a libation I tried once and didn't much care for. Still, I raised a parting glass to Butchie's memory last Wednesday night.

Boys round in to playoff form

Greg O'Connell at sweeper for the entire Harwich game. The coach has made a habit of swinging the multi-talented junior to the frontline when his team struggles offensively, but resisted that temptation this time around.

The game's lone tally was delivered by the team's leading goal scorer, senior Tim Baird, in the first half.

Jesse Brewer, who took over the starting keeper duties last week, lost the bid for his first shutout when he bruised his knee on a late-game collision with a Harwich forward. Junior Curt Kahn took over in net for the final few minutes. Nigro expected Brewer to be ready for today's home match against Hull.

Nigro was not offering apologies for his team's lack of offense following the game. Indeed, considering the 90-minute bus ride, followed by a two and a half hour wait (the Cohasset girls played first), the red-hot goaltending of Harwich all-star candidate Joey Zabielski and the fact that the Skippers maintained a strong territorial advantage throughout against a squad fighting tooth and nail for a post-season berth, he didn't feel he needed to. It also didn't help that he was missing one of his hottest offensive players of late in junior Evan Pestone.

"I feel like things are coming together pretty well for us right now at a time you like to see that happening," said Nigro. "Defensively, we're playing very well, and we're moving the ball well through midfield and creating rushes."

The Skippers play their final two games of the regular season at home under the lights against neighboring town rivals. Hull comes into town tonight (7 start), which wraps up the South Shore League schedule for Cohasset. The season finale is scheduled for tomorrow night, with Scituate serving as the homecoming opponent (7 start). The Cohasset girls open the night of soccer trying to play spoiler to the playoff hopeful Lady Sailors (6-6-3).

the field. O'Neill has left the scoring up to the younger players this year.

"She just can't buy a goal," observed Beal prior to Tuesday's match-up.

Cohasset led 5-2 at halftime, and seemed quite determined not to let the lead slip away. Holbrook had gotten the better of Cohasset in their first meeting of the year, as they were the beneficiaries of a game-winning ricochet goal in the waning moments.

On Friday, Cohasset shut out Harwich for the second time this season, 3-0. In the previous game, Cohasset dominated the entire territorial game, but were only able to push one goal past superstar keeper Diane Piersal.

But with Piersal hurt, Cohasset attackers were able to find the net more often. Newcomer Laura Marks, a sophomore recently called up from JV, scored her first varsity goal to get the scoring started.

Flanagan showed her impressive foot speed with an unassisted goal later in the half, beating the second string goalie to the corner. Sophomore Jen Buckley finished Cohasset's scoring with a chip shot just under the crossbar.

On the other side of the field, junior goalie Kelly Holway recorded the shutout in net. Her steadily improving skills have shown that the work she put in has proved effective.

"She put in a lot of time this summer, and it has definitely paid off," lauded Beal. "She is fifteen steps ahead of where she was last year."

Next year, Holway will be competing with sophomore backup keeper Brittancy Novak, who performed extremely well when seeing some varsity action.

With talents such as Novak, Marks, Buckley, Weber, and defenders Brenna O'Donnell and Holly Graham, the sophomore class has already shown they are real competitors at the varsity level. And with 12 juniors returning as well, it should be fierce competition next fall for playing time.

"The sophomores are really stepping up," Beal noted. "Come next fall, it is going to be about who wants it more. It is going to be a battle."

"Five more seconds, and maybe we get the win that keeps us alive for a playoff spot," lamented Bostwick following the game. "But it's our own fault for taking so long to get it going."

Was she referring to this game or this season? I didn't ask.

The Cohasset girls had kept their tenuous post-season hopes alive on Friday with a big 2-1 win over South Shore League and neighboring rival Hull.

All of the offense in this one came in the first half, with both of Cohasset's goals coming off corners. Junior captain Heather Peraino got the Lady Skippers on the board first at 18:28 on an assist from Danielle Pinkus. Four minutes later, Deanna Brown made it 2-0 on a nice fed from Hurley.

Hull's Christine Sampson made things interesting when she scored off a penalty shot five minutes before the break, but Cohasset clamped down the defense after that to dominate the second half both in terms of possession and territory.

Bostwick, who still raves about the way her girls finished the season after a rough start, had particular praise following the past week's action for midfielders Peraino and Lindsay Grossman, who she said "have done an incredible job keeping the ball moving into our offensive end."

Offensively, the veteran coach said that Brown, Abby Coakley, Allison Scott and Rachel Smith have finished the season with a flourish, and ditto for Sarah Dennis, Kimmy Ulmer, Jackie Goines and goalie Sara Genovese at the defensive end.

The Lady Skippers (now 5-7-5) will try to wrap up their season today within one game of .500, as they host Silver Lake—a team they beat to open the season, 1-0.

"That would be a nice way for the seniors to go out," said Bostwick. "A lot of them have worked really hard, and maybe that would help them feel a little better about things."

"Overall, I'd say this has been a nice run for the younger kids, but kind of sad for the seniors," the coach continued. "For the girls who'll be back next season, I'm hoping the way we finished up shows them how much they have to commit themselves if they want to succeed."

Cohasset gridders stay perfect

"We are not trying to make excuses," reminded Rolfe. "But we have to play better than that."

The Skippers were able to overcome the Lancers' quick strike, and countered with a touchdown of their own on the very next possession.

Down 6-0, junior quarterback Mike Snowdale drove his team downfield in a hurry, eventually connecting with sophomore wide out Chris Bildeau for the score.

Bilodeau scored again, as did junior tight end Tom Anderson, as that tandem continued their season-long run of picking apart opposing secondaries for big plays.

"We have got kids that can really catch the ball," confirmed Rolfe, who has regularly seen his receivers and quarterbacks voluntarily practice well past the normal quitting time. "We don't drop passes. They make some difficult catches, and they don't miss the easy ones."

The three TD passes gave Snowdale 11 for the season, comfortably ahead of all other Div. 5 quarterbacks in Eastern Mass.

One of the main reasons for the success of Snowdale and the Skipper air attack has been the balance of pass and run. Senior Jason Brown, who has continually proved he can score any time he has an opening. On Saturday, his threat alone clearly forced the Lancers to overload the line of scrimmage.

But even with the seven and eight-man fronts Norton was showing, Cohasset refused to concede itself as a physically weaker team. The Skippers resilience was tested more than usual, as one of their biggest and strongest defensive players, Ben Lynner, was playing well below 100 percent with a strained back.

Rolfe mentioned that there were a few things that made this effort far from the prettiest game he has seen his team play this year.

Brown nearly had a touchdown that would have put the game out of reach, but he fumbled on the Norton 1-yard line.

The defense was run up for two scores for the first time this year.

And the Skippers committed (what Rolfe assumed to be a school record) seven illegal procedure penalties.

However, his team got the victory, and that is what is important.

"We are trying to win games," he said. "This is crunch time."

Next up on the Skippers' schedule is Nantucket, a non-league game that will be played this Saturday for Homecoming.

"If we play like we have been playing, we should be OK," said Rolfe, falling back on the line with which he tends to conclude most of his post-game reports.

sidelines her from sports for six. Still, she has attended the South Shore Sports Therapy clinic in Weymouth, trying to regain strength and balance by bending and straightening her knee more and more.

Being a sideline member of the soccer team has been difficult for Carter, especially with the recent wins the girls have had. This has not stopped her from fulfilling the role of captain, though.

"It has been hard watching the games," said Carter. "But it's my senior year, and I want to still be a part of it."

Carter has attended many of the games and practices (when not at physical therapy), lending her expertise wherever possible to the young team.

"She is sorely missed," admitted Carter's soccer coach, Deb Beal. "Her leadership, her attitude. . .she works hard and her hard work is contagious."

Carter's specialty in both lacrosse and soccer is her fierce defense. Her ability to contain multiple attackers with her remarkable speed is as impressive as that of any other South Shore League defenders. Her stable defense was mirrored in her stable position as a respected veteran on the team.

"They are missing (Carlie's) on field leadership," affirmed Beal, referring to her soccer team. "[The team] wants to win, and she keeps the negatives at bay."

Her leadership appears to extend beyond the playing field. She is a National Honors Society student, who will be applying early to Boston College's school of education.

Carter's healing will not be complete until March, after the gymnastics season is over. Although she is disappointed that she will not be able to compete in arguably her best sport, she could not seem more excited about watching her co-captain Kristin Sheerin this winter.

Her sense of team concept is what makes her so popular among coaches and teammates.

Pee Wee B team shocks unbeaten Canton with 3-3 tie

Coastal Stars "Game of the Week"

The enduring lessons in youth sports, like most things in life, come not from the victories, but in the struggle to overcome setbacks. This week's game of the week features a Coastal Stars Pee Wee B team that battled back from early season disappointments to tie an undefeated Canton team, 3-3, in a Saturday evening barn burner at Ulin Rink in Milton.

Having started the season winless, the coaches made some adjustments in their practice regiment in the days leading up to the Canton match up. Coach Bob Morgan and his assistants, Rob Doonan and Rod Jenks, put a specific focus on team defense, emphasizing more physical play and consistent two way play.

The team responded beautifully. Coach Morgan praised his team defense from Dennis McCarthy's solid goaltending out to the tenacious up and down play of forwards T.J. Kennedy, Steve Jenks, and Cody Morgan. Particular praise was bestowed upon the rock solid defensive play, of what Coach Doonan has dubbed, the teams "Bash Brothers" – defensemen Mike Parsons, Will Nagle, Jack Jenkins, and Ryan McElaney. Doonan said it was their toughness and consistent play that kept the game close.

The Stars got out of the gate early with the impressive Marshfield forward, Chris Walker, scoring the first of his three goals. Walker had a typically solid game and through the help of line mates Austin Lanzilotti and Chris Davis notched his first hat trick of the season.

Once the Stars went up 2-0, after Walker's second tally, Canton's strength began to surface as they scored two quick goals to tie the game 2-2 going into the third.

It was Walker who answered right back for the Stars as he tucked in Jack Jenkins' blast from the point. Walker was not only dominant, but also efficient as he scored his third goal on his fourth shot.

Canton quickly quelled the Stars' celebration as they tied the game midway into the third. McCarthy's steadfast play in goal kept the game tied late into the third and set the stage for last second dramatics.

With less than ten seconds left Cohasset forward Corbin Faber grabbed a loose puck and broke up ice. After decking one Canton defender, Faber broke free with forward Pat Doonan coming down his off wing. Doonan's hustle created a 2 on 1 and gave Faber the option of passing or shooting. Seeing that his line mate was covered, Faber took the shot. Fabre's shot was heading into the net high on the goalie's glove side. With less than two seconds on the clock Canton's goalie flashed out his glove and made the save to preserve the tie for Canton.

While the game ended 3-3 Coach Morgan and his assistants considered a victory of effort and perseverance and applauded his team' s defensive stand.

Helping kids keep a happy medium on Halloween

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PHILLIPSBRINK

Hello families of Cohasset school-children! I hope that the autumn season is treating you well and gearing up for next weeks Halloween fun. I am sure that there are many wonderful activities, treats and games taking place at the elementary schools and the local pre-schools. As the children get ready and the excitement builds, we as adults need to try and keep a happy medium. Because Halloween falls right in the middle of a school week, it is so important to remember to not over-stimulate and keep the kids going so that they get "the most" that they can or give into the whole, "please Mom or Dad, let's do one more street". I have to get ready myself to not let that happen as I know how many days it will take for the effects from a very late bedtime and too much candy to wear off. I am sure that all of our teachers will thank us too if we can try to help in any way. Also, please remember to go over all safety rules with your children and check all treats that they receive before they eat it.

Speaking of safety and rules, one of our bus drivers here in town asked me to let all of us know how important it is to respect the school buses at all times. She has had several "near misses" of people not stopping for her when her warnings are on, trying to drive past when they think they can make it and one of the latest but most dangerous incident involved a car and driver who did not give his car enough time to warm up and because he couldn't see out his front window, almost hit a child. Please take the time to follow all the safety rules when it comes to the busses as they are carrying our children! Another point that I would like to make is that when children are on a bus, it is the drivers right to discipline them in any way that they need to. Each driver at any given time, is expected to be a safe driver, a friend, a disciplinarian and deal with us as parents, all at the same time. If you hear that your son/daughter had to be spoken to, moved to the front of the bus or otherwise disciplined, support the bus driver in that decision. Contrary to popular belief, the drivers do not have eyes in back of their heads and need to keep everyone safe as well as try to stay on time, no easy feat I am sure!

This month, we will be spotlighting some events and learning programs that took place at The Osgood School. In our next month's page, the Deer Hill will share some of the units that school is working on.

Make a difference

This Saturday, Oct. 27 from 9 a.m.-3 p.m., Make a Difference Day is happening at Milliken Field. This wonderful town-wide event is being sponsored by the Osgood PSO, The Osgood School Council, The Deer Hill PSO and The Cohasset Soccer Club. Anyone who would like to make some fantastic baked goods(packaged whole or individually) can do so and should drop them off at the Osgood School Entrance on Friday, Oct. 26. Please make sure to mark all peanut-free foods right on the package.

This fundraiser is to benefit the Fund for Public Schools-WTC School Relief Fund. Also available for purchase will be some beautiful artwork made by the students of The Joseph Osgood School and some tasty red, white and blue treats and awesome patriotic gimp key chains made by the students at the Deer Hill School. So make sure to stop at Milliken Field if you are not already there for a soccer game and grab some treats, hotdogs and drinks or maybe, some fantastic artwork.

The children and families of Cohasset are definitely pulling together to help other children who were affected in the WTC tragedies and by all of us supporting this effort, we should feel very proud of our schools, the children and our town! Please, come on out and make a difference!

Osgood highlights

The Osgood School has been a very busy place to be. The halls are beautifully decorated with so many patriotic artworks done by the children. The Cohasset Firefighters were at the school recently and visited the Kindergarten and second grade in conjunction with Fire Safety Week. The children were treated to some fire safety presentations and were then allowed to climb inside the ambulance and fire truck. A sincere thanks goes out to the firefighters as well as Officer Lisa Matos for all the hard work that they have done. Officer Lisa taught the Child Abuse Prevention Program with Judy Wilson, the health educator. Please make sure to find the great patriotic note cards made by the first graders and the patriotic pins made by the second graders when you attend Make A Difference Day on Saturday, they are really beautiful! Thank you to Mrs. Betsy Ogden for all of her hard work in this area.

Team Hanson's intergenerational unit at Osgood ended with 12 important visitors. Twelve grandparents spent the morning sharing their experiences of their own third grade to the amazement and interest of Team Hanson. It was great fun!

School councils

Did you know that you can attend the School Council meetings of any of the schools? These informational meetings are open to all members of the school and community. The most important part of the School Councils is to identify the educational needs of the school, adopt educational goals based on those needs and ensure that goals are consistent with state and district goals. Council members for the Osgood School are Jean Free and Judy Wilson(teachers,) Melissa Grasz, Dorothy Green and Allison Moskow(parents), and Janet Sheehan, Osgood principal. Please feel free to join these members on Tuesday, Nov. 6 at 3:30 p.m. in The Osgood Conference Room.

Osgood PSO

Also, The next Osgood PSO meeting will be held on Friday, Nov. 2 in The Osgood Music Room at 9:15 am. All are welcome and encouraged to come and share your ideas, thoughts and votes. If you have any questions, call Sarah Porter at 781-383-2029.

Another happening in the month of October for the second grade was the Native American unit. Mrs. Collins, who works at the South Shore Art Center came to all of the second-grade classes. She taught the children about a medicine man and the clambake. Mrs. Collins also made Native American necklaces with the children. It was a wonderful way for the children to enjoy and learn hands-on about the Native Americans.

School shopping

Attention all Cohasset Shoppers, here is a great way to let your way to put your online shopping dollars to good use. The Osgood and Deer Hill schools are registered, with the Middle/High School soon to follow at www.schoolpop.com and everyone out there who shops on the internet from a huge selection of stores can register as well. After you register and select your school, each time you make a purchase from a participating store, the school will receive a percentage to be mailed each quarter. Some of the stores are Amazon.com, Talbots, Lands End, J. Crew, Barnes and Noble, Gap and a whole lot more. So make sure to register at www.schoolpop.com and let those dollars grow to help our schools.

Rugs wanted

The students and staff at the Deer Hill School are hard at work in projects, activities and learning. The halls are filled with the work of so many students and in next months copy, we will feature some photos of these amazing projects. The construction at the Deer Hill School is moving right along and the students and staff are all adjusting to it beautifully. One of the helpful items that would be very useful to teachers and students would be the donations of some area rugs. If anyone has any rugs that are lying around looking for a new home, call the main office at 383-6115.

Environmental mapping

Although the Middle/Senior School does not have a lot to report on for this month's school page, they too are doing well with the construction and all that is happening within the school. Please make sure to look at the calendar for any important dates in November. Mr. Jack Buckley, a teacher at CHMS, is participating in GIS(Geographic Information Systems Day, hosted by TPMC, an environmental mapping firm in Scituate. Jeff Donze, a CHS grad, Cohasset resident and professional cartographer is the host at TPMC. The essence of this day is to train students who worked this past summer on the harbor study project in the use of GIS mapping software. The training for these students and Mr. Buckley is being held on Nov. 14. The Web site to better explain all of this fascinating stuff is www.gis-day.com and is definitely worth taking a look at.

This Schools In page will be published on the fourth Thursday of each month. For next months copy, all information and photos need to be to me no later than 9:00 am on Friday, November 16th. This is a page dedicated to the schools and families of students from K-12. If you have any information, ideas or thoughts on this page, please send them along to me in one of the following ways.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Learning about Native American art

Heather Collins, Coordinator for Community Programs at the South Shore Art Center, recently visited all second grade classes to introduce their Native American thematic unit. The students will be immersed in this study incorporating the arts throughout October and November. by Isabel Robinson, a second grade student.

Mrs. Collins' visit

When Mrs. Collins came to our class, we were very excited. We learned a lot from her. She taught us how the Indians made a clambake. She taught us about the medicine man. She taught us how to make porcupine quill necklaces. She even put on special Indian music and told us that the Native American playing the flute makes his own flutes. She told what the Indians did when they were waiting for their food. We also got a chance to draw what the music made you feel like. I drew wildlife in its natural habitat.

By Isabel Robinson, a second grade student

Mrs. Heather Collins chats with pupils in Mrs. Cook's class.

Cohasset man allegedly attacks gas station owner

A Cohasset man was arraigned on charges of assault and battery, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon [blunt object] and a hate crime Monday in Quincy District Court.

Police allege Charles W. MacGregor, Jr., 47, of 112 Jerusalem Road hit village gas station owner George Roukounakis, 51, of 99 Doane St. repeatedly with his fists while he held a piece of metal in one of his hands at about 4:40 p.m., Oct. 17. Roukounakis went to the hospital for treatment of his injuries.

MacGregor, who was released on pre-trial probation, has a return court date of Dec. 14. He was ordered to stay away from the victim, FBI and Cohasset police, and maintain medical treatment for a mental health problem, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

Police say the incident was a hate crime because MacGregor allegedly called Roukounakis, who is of Greek descent, an Arab several times during the attack.

The alleged dispute began over a three-year-old bill, Jackson said. MacGregor allegedly came into the station saying he was overcharged for a wiring job on his vehicle and wanted his money back.

Police investigated the incident and issued a warrant for MacGregor's arrest on Monday.

An academic standout and a packed schedule of extracurricular activities, Abigail Donahue has little time to horse around unless she's helping others.

Thayer student finds rewards in giving

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

This continues our ongoing campaign recognizing local teens who give back to their communities.

Watch for a new Spirit of Community feature each month. We welcome your nominations. Please see our ballot on page 4

Abby Donahue enjoys helping people, plain and simple. Whatever the task at hand, whether it's helping mentally challenged children with therapeutic horseback riding, tutoring her peers in Spanish, participating in local fundraising events or bringing gifts to homeless children during the holidays, Donahue does it all willingly and enthusiastically.

While she is just 17, the Norwell resident already grasps the true meaning of community. In her spare time, she tends to her own studies. Donahue is an honor student at Thayer Academy in Braintree.

"I just find helping people to be something that's really rewarding," she said.

"She does so much in different areas of community service," said Abby's mother Susan. "It was when she started putting together all her college applications that I fully realized the cumulative effect of everything she does."

Abby tutors Spanish, something she has done since freshman year, and she also tutors students in math. She steps out for three major fundraising walks every year — The Walk for Life, The Walk for Cancer and The Walk for Hunger.

And every year Abby participates in a charitable program called Christmas in the City where she brings stuffed animals and presents to homeless children in Boston. In order to prepare for the event, Abby holds a stuffed animal drive at school every year in order to collect enough of them. All of her friends happily participate.

Her love of horses — Susan said Abby's been riding "since she could walk" —has led to her involvement in the therapeutic riding program for mentally challenged children at River Wind Farm in Pembroke. There, Abby serves as a horse walker, helping to guide the horses while the students ride them. But Abby also rides professionally, and she recently returned from the Morgan Grand National World Championship where she took third place in one category and sixth in another.

"She's always had a soft spot for little kids and animals. I love to see her with the kids on the horses. It's one of the rare forms of physical therapy that gives these kids a true sense of movement."

"I have a very busy schedule," Abby added, "but somehow I fit it all in. I usually end up staying up pretty late at night doing homework."

Abby doesn't let her charitable work interfere with her school work, and it shows. In addition to being an academic standout at Thayer, she plays lacrosse, ice hockey and field hockey, and has even started up a new powder puff football league there. She is the co-editor of the school yearbook and also serves on the community service club. She is a member of the math team, the Spanish Club and the literary society, and still finds time to give tours of Thayer to visiting groups.

"I just feel like you have to do well in school, but I also think everyone should do what they can to improve their community and the quality of life there," Abby said.

Many people who work with and know Abby say she is the epitome of the term community service.

"She's a super kid," said Marc Rando, Abby's advisor at Thayer. "Anyone you talk to will tell you she's quick with a smile, and she'll do anything for anyone. She takes on a lot of projects in school and out of school without backing off her commitments. All I hear from her teachers are positive things."

Cindy Spooner, founder of the therapeutic horseback riding program, said Abby is a joy to have around and emphasized how important Abby is there.

"We are so lucky to have her," Spooner said. "She's just wonderful. I'm always surprised that she can find the time, but she does. She is very personable and we're very grateful she is with us."

Dolores Bailey also works with Abby at the horseback riding program, and like Spooner, she is grateful that Abby is there to help.

"She's a very focused young person, and when she is committed to something, she follows through," Bailey said. "She's got very quiet strength, that's something I notice about her a lot. She is very responsible, and it's amazing to see her center herself when she is up against something. She seems to pack a lot more in a day than most people do. She enjoys what she does, but really, she just enjoys life."

These days, Abby is spending a good deal of time applying to colleges. She said she is aiming to get into Dartmouth College in New Hampshire. Eventually, she wants to get into a field that involves animals, but she also wants to put her Spanish skills to use. Wherever she goes, she said community service will be a part of her.

"It's something I want to stay involved in for the rest of my life," she said.

Among her other good works, Abigail Donahue, this month's Spirit of Community winner, volunteers as a horse walker at the therapeutic riding program at River Wind Farm in Pembroke. Pan roasted chicken breasts

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The major problem with roast chicken breasts is the skin—it is often pallid, rubbery, and tasteless. In addition, the meat of the chicken breast is usually lacking in flavor. One solution is to sauté the breast skin side down in a very hot pan on the stovetop followed by a short stay in the oven to finish the cooking. This delivers great skin and the opportunity to make a quick pan sauce to finish the dish. I set out to test the details of this approach, hoping to find a superior recipe for this common Tuesday night dinner.

I began by testing whether the chicken would benefit from a quick brine. (Brine is simply a solution of cold water, sugar, and salt in which the chicken pieces are immersed.) I found that a quick one-hour brine made a substantial difference both in flavor and juiciness. In addition, the skin of the brined breasts turned a much deeper color due to the sugar. Although this step does require a bit of advance planning, the results were clearly worth it.

I wanted this recipe to serve four and found that I needed a 12-inch skillet to handle four half-breasts. In addition, the skillet had to be extremely hot, otherwise it will cool down quickly once the breasts are added. Five minutes over high heat was necessary on my stovetop although this time will vary depending on the type of pan and the heat output of your burners. Covering the pan to avoid splattering only made the skin soggy, so a large splatter screen was helpful. The breasts are cooked skin-side down in about 8 minutes; the skin should be a very dark brown and crispy. Next, I put the skillet with the chicken breasts into a low oven, 250degrees. Unfortunately, the breasts took 40 minutes to finish. I tested a variety of temperatures and finally settled on 350 degrees which required only 20 minutes of oven time. This higher temperature did not dry out the meat since the chicken had been brined and was therefore juicy. I also found that a few slashes in the skin produced even crispier skin.

The last element was the sauce. I assembled many of the standard pan sauce ingredients—wine, stock, sherry, vermouth, garlic, shallots, anchovies, mustard, parsley, thyme, tarragon, oregano, olives, capers, lemon, bay leaves, cloves, and butter. Anchovies, garlic and cloves were too strong for this simple dish. I liked a combination of shallots and sherry but it needed lightening with a bit of chicken stock. I found that the addition of mustard, lemon juice, thyme, and parsley rounded out the flavors nicely. I also developed a quick sauce of dry vermouth, stock, bay leaf, capers, olives, lemon juice and parsley or oregano. The second sauce, which has a bit of a raw quality (the capers, olives and herbs are all thrown in at the end), seemed lighter, and the sherry and shallot sauce was richer. Both recipes are printed below.

PAN ROASTED CHICKEN

If you purchase kosher chicken, you may skip the brine since these chickens are already salted.

For the chicken:

1 cup kosher salt

1/2 cup sugar

4 split chicken breasts, preferably free range, 3/4 to 7/8 pound each

Freshly ground black pepper

2 tablespoons olive oil

For the sauce:

1 tablespoon finely chopped shallot

1/2 cup sherry

3/4 cup chicken stock, low sodium or homemade preferred

1 teaspoon Dijon mustard

1/2 teaspoon finely chopped fresh thyme

1 tablespoon lemon juice

1 teaspoon finely chopped Italian flat-leaf parsley

1. Dissolve salt and sugar in 2 quarts of cold water in a large bowl. Immerse chicken and refrigerate until fully seasoned, about 1 hour. (You can also use a large freezer bag.) Remove chicken from brine and rinse well under cold running water. Thoroughly dry with paper towels. Heat the oven to 350 degrees and adjust oven rack to the center position.

2. Using a sharp knife, make three diagonal slashes in the skin of each piece of chicken being careful not to cut into the meat. Season both sides with freshly ground pepper. Meanwhile, heat a heavy-duty 12-inch skillet over high heat for 5 minutes. (Time will vary depending on the pan and the stove.) Once hot, add the olive oil and swirl to coat the bottom of the pan. Add the chicken breasts, skin side down, and stand back. They will splatter. Cook for 7 to 8 minutes or until dark brown. Turn the breasts skin side up and place the skillet in the heated oven. Cook for 15 to 25minutes or until an instant read thermometer reads 165 degrees at the thickest part of each breast. Remove to a warm platter and cover with aluminum foil.

3. Pour off all but 1 tablespoon of fat from the skillet and place over high heat. Add the shallot, sherry and chicken stock and scrape the browned bits from the bottom of the pan. Cook at a vigorous boil until the liquid has thickened slightly and is reduced by about two thirds, about 5 minutes. Add the mustard and thyme and cook 1 minute. Add the lemon juice and parsley and cook 30 seconds more. Serve immediately spooned over the chicken breasts.

Serves 4

Olive and Caper Variation

Omit the shallots. Use dry vermouth in place of the sherry and add one bay leaf along with the liquid. Omit the mustard and thyme and add 2tablespoons capers and 1/4 cup pitted and chopped oil cured or kalamata olives in their place. Freshly chopped oregano may be substituted for the parsley.

Students' work stocks Potting Shed for the holidays

By Seth Jacobson

SJACOBSON@WICKED.COM

Craig Powers proudly displays his basket work for sale at The Potting Shed.

Soothing herb soaps. All kinds of flowers. Produce. Lavender sticks. Wind chimes. Beautifully painted slates.

These are just a few of the items on sale at The Potting Shed at The Cardinal Cushing Center School in Hanover.

What's more, the items are not ordered from a list and shipped in — they are made in the utmost professional manner by the students at the school, all of whom are mentally challenged. The school is home to 150 students, ranging in ages from six to 22 years old.

The Potting Shed is a direct result of the school's vocational program, and Dave Kraemer, a teacher at the school, spends all of his time working with students to build on its success. He said while working at and making crafts for the shed teaches students valuable artistic techniques, it also helps them prepare to deal with a work environment.

"The idea is to try to provide the students with the skills it takes to be an independent worker," Kraemer said. "They have to wear appropriate dress, they get to meet customers and they also learn money skills. I think it provides a very holistic experience for them."

Kraemer said the shed is always busy, but he said he would like to see more customers in the store on a more frequent basis to admire the work of the students, and maybe even make a couple of purchases.

"Everything in here was made by the students," he said. "All the vegetables, herbs and flowers we have were grown by them. We have over 2,000 mums in our fields, as well as a large vegetable and herb garden."

Kraemer said the shed is open all year, and the students make different kinds of crafts for each season. Right now, the students are gearing up for the holidays by making ornaments, pottery, and wreaths.

"The more people that start coming in, the more opportunities these kids will have," Kraemer said. "I think it would be good for the students to have more contact with the public. There's a number of things in here people will really appreciate, and our prices are relatively low."

The shed is decorated with student-crafted items including homemade herbal vinegars, carefully-woven baskets and even stress relieving devices called eye pillows.

"I feel really fortunate to be in the position I'm in," Kraemer said. "Working here is like a breath of fresh air. I think a lot of people will see why if they come in. The people who do come here are always very pleased and they keep coming back."

Kraemer said the work the students do at the shed helps them with their senses of self esteem, their work skills and it gives them a sense of satisfaction to complete jobs and have people comment positively on them. The students say they simply enjoy the work.

"I just like making crafts," said Craig Powers, 22, one of Kraemer's students. "I also like taking care of the landscaping work and making baskets."

"I like taking care of the mums, the crafts and plating," added Julius

Green thumbs up

Tiny parachutes of silky, white filaments drift across the autumn meadow. Backlit by the slanted rays of the late afternoon sunlight, they appear to glow as gentle breezes transport these delicate wisps far and wide, effectively dispersing their cargo of flat, brown seeds from the distinctive pods of milkweed. In future years, new colonies of these familiar wildflowers will sprout throughout the expansive meadow and surrounding fields.

Nearby, a solitary monarch butterfly floats among the clumps of waning purple asters, sipping nectar to energize itself for its long journey south to Mexico. Future generations of these attractive black-veined, orange butterflies will most likely return to these same pastures to lay their eggs on the broad leaves of the milkweed plants which will reappear each season as the yearly cycle repeats itself and nature perpetuates her species.

A flock of small birds passes overhead. The high-pitched whistles and twittering of these cedar waxwings have become familiar as throughout the year they visit my gardens to feed in the treetops, partaking of apple blossom petals in the spring, insects in the heat of summer and fruit during the fall and winter months. In unison, these gregarious, crested, avian visitors swoop down to roost among the branches of my Zumi crabapple tree laden with clusters of bright red berries. For the next month or two, they will systematically devour the multitude of shiny fruits, joined by finches, cardinals, bluebirds, robins, flickers and mockingbirds.

Many attractive woody plants produce fruit which may go unnoticed until their foliage has fallen, the color of their berries intensifying as temperatures drop. As their fruits ripen, most of these fruit-bearing trees and shrubs attract birds and wildlife during the fall and winter months. A landscape rich with trees, shrubs and vines which produce seeds and berries will sustain many species the entire winter often encouraging robins, bluebirds and other migratory species to remain for nature lovers to enjoy year-round.

Ornamental crabapples (Malus spp.) are an attractive, adaptable and diversified group of small fruiting trees. Tolerant of a wide range of soils, crabapples perform best in full sun where they burst forth each spring with a glorious profusion of bloom, clothing the entire tree in pink, white or red blossoms. In late summer and autumn, fruits ripen in shades of vibrant red, yellow or purple. Look for newer cultivars of crabapples which provide greatly improved disease resistance. Those bearing smaller fruits are more likely to appeal to birds although the entire tree may be stripped of its flavorful berries before winter arrives. If space permits, plant more than one variety, as fruits ripen at different intervals. Although nearly all the berries of the Zumi crabapple are usually consumed during autumn, other cultivars are left untouched until late winter or early spring.

The dogwood family includes several handsome members which are attractive in all seasons. The popular flowering dogwood (Cornus florida) displays magnificent pink, red or white flower bracts in spring and glowing, scarlet foliage in fall accentuated by clusters of brilliant, shiny red berries which usually disappear early in the season, courtesy of voracious squirrels, robins, catbirds, mockingbirds and flickers. Its horizontal branching provides a distinctive silhouette which adds grace and beauty to the winter landscape. The Korean dogwood (C. kousa) which blooms later in spring after the foliage has emerged, also produces vibrant russet autumn leaves accompanied by spectacular, dangling, fleshy red fruits resembling large raspberries. Its form tends to be more upright and vase-shaped than its American cousin with the added bonus of peeling bark as the trees mature. Dogwoods thrive in well-drained but moisture-retentive, soils in sun or partial shade.

The autumn olive (Elaeagnus umbellatus) is a vigorous, multi-stemmed, deciduous tree or large shrub which offers multiple seasons of interest although its ability to naturalize along our roadsides may qualify it as an invasive plant species. An excellent choice for seaside landscapes, it is tolerant of wind and sunny, dry locations. Silvery, wavy-margined, gray-green leaves often camouflage the clusters of yellow-white flowers which appear in late spring, but their intense fragrance, which attracts bees, butterflies and hummingbirds, is unmistakable and intoxicating. Inconspicuous clusters of silver-striped berries follow which gradually deepen to red during the autumn months and are systematically consumed by finches, tufted titmice, chickadees and mockingbirds. One specimen is likely to produce numerous offspring in the surrounding landscape as their seeds are dispersed by their feathered carriers causing it to occasionally become a nuisance but I welcome its sweet perfume each spring accompanied by its wildlife visitors through-out the seasons. Planted next to my foundation beside a kitchen bay window, its dense habit makes it an ideal cover for nesting birds and a roost for birds during the winter months as they devour the tiny red fruits and flit to and from to the bird feeder nearby.

The planting of fruit-bearing trees will greatly enhance the winter landscape. If possible, position those which offer winter beauty where they can be observed from inside your home so that you may enjoy their splendor throughout the chilly months to come and be entertained by the antics of birds and wildlife as they partake of nature's bounty.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, OCT. 25

There are bound to be some exciting developments in the next few days. Keep an open mind. Explore new horizons, develop alliances, set goals. You can break new ground at home or work. The Aquarius moon interacts with Uranus at 3:32 p.m. and becomes inactive. Uranus, the planetary ruler of Aquarius, is slowing its rate of motion, preparing for direct travel on October 30. An applying alignment of Venus and Pluto may spark romantic passions this evening. Take a walk on the wild side.

FRIDAY, OCT. 26

The moon enters Pisces at 9:56 a.m. The planet Venus forms major contacts to Pluto and Saturn today and Jupiter tomorrow. Creativity and artistic sensitivity are at an all-time high. You can experience breakthroughs and achieve goals. Appreciate or create art, music, photography, dance. Relationship or financial issues may also come to the forefront. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury-Jupiter warns against jumping to conclusions or going to extremes. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days.

SATURDAY, OCT. 27

The planet Mars enters Aquarius at 1:19 p.m., remaining there until December 8. The moon travels in Pisces and forms challenging alignments to Pluto and Saturn between 1:30-2:30 p.m. Stay upbeat and don't get caught up in worries, self-doubts in this period. At 5:31 p.m. the Pisces moon aligns with Jupiter and becomes inactive. A 90-degree alignment of Venus-Jupiter sets the stage for a relaxing, social evening. Keep it light and don't take anything or anyone too seriously.

SUNDAY, OCT. 28

The Pisces moon continues inactive travel until 9:15 p.m. No major planetary activity occurs until that time. That means that this is a day to relax and mellow out. Unplug from your daily routine and responsibilities; enjoy favorite leisure activities. The moon enters Aries at 9:15 p.m. However, a 90-degree alignment of the sun and Neptune continues to generate a sleepy, laidback mood.

MONDAY, OCT. 29

Gear up for an action-packed week. An Aries moon today sets a quick pace. Channel high energy constructively and plan to get a lot accomplished. Others may be impatient, irritable. Keep a cool head. The green light is on for new starts across the board. Launch bold new enterprises, set long-range plans and goals. Get back on track with exercise and physical fitness regimens.

TUESDAY, OCT. 30

Get an early start to this day. You can be most productive. The Aries moon forms six major alignments to planets until 2:17 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Uranus, however, takes center stage. At 5:55 p.m. Uranus, standing at 21-degrees of Aquarius, begins direct travel. Expect the unexpected. Be more spontaneous, open to new ideas and ways of doing things.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 31

The stage is set for an exciting, 'anything can happen' kind of day. At 7:48 a.m. the moon enters Taurus, beginning the final windup to the full moon that culminates forty-one minutes past midnight. In addition, Venus, the planetary ruler of Taurus, prepares to align with unpredictable Uranus. It may be difficult to focus on business and practical matters. Postpone dealing with important projects; make final decisions in a few days. Instead, put on your party hat and go for the good times.

THURSDAY, NOV. 1

November begins and ends with a full moon, setting the stage for a high-energy, intense month. You can cut through obstacles and move forward in your personal or professional life. Today the full moon culminates at 12:41 a.m., 9-degrees of Taurus/Scorpio. Venus and Mercury form harmonious contacts to Uranus, prompting you to be more inventive; go with new innovative ideas. The moon continues active travel in Taurus until 11:20 p.m., when it aligns with Uranus.

FRIDAY, NOV. 2

Conflicting planetary influences can make for a challenging day. Saturn opposes Pluto for the second time this year. Jupiter begins retrograde travel at 10:35 a.m., 16-degrees Cancer. The moon continues inactive travel until 4:12 p.m. Take extra time out for yourself. Review and reassess your progress toward present goals. Let go of people or situations that may be holding you back, cut your losses. This is a time to reconsider, regroup, modify your game plan. At 4:12 p.m. the moon enters Gemini. In addition, Mercury and Venus prepare to align in Libra. The evening rates high for socializing, partying, romance.

The Last Castle (B)

Talk about serendipity: That potent symbol, Old Glory, is almost a character itself in "The Last Castle," rallied around, literally, and raised as an expression of honor and decency, this at a time, now, when men who didn't even know they had a little slit in the lapel of their jackets are sticking flag pins there, disobedient to the once-fashionable notion that respecting the flag is infra-dig. If you give the film an extra minute of thought you realize that the good guys are actually a grab bag of dreadful criminals, but it will do very well at the box office in large part because it is superficially unequivocal about values, and our recent decades of wallowing in mindless relativism seem, now, especially silly. As I said, talk about serendipity.

The polarity here is a rigid, by-the-book, sadistic military prison commandant, Col. Winter (James Gandolfini, whose Tony Soprano is far more conflicted), confronted by former three-star general, Gene Irwin (Robert Redford, in his just about to be canonized incarnation), now sentenced to 10 years behind bars, who sees ignoble motives and unacceptable cruelties and sets out to undermine Winter.

"Brubaker" will spring to mind, but our era is one of upgrading the levels of violence in films, and in life, and one also almost incapable of resisting the tendency to overdo things like a final encounter that is thrilling to behold yet ridiculous. You may feel a mite cowed by the realization that sometimes, like now, you can both give in to rah-rah-rah patriotic fervor and realize that in a calmer moment you would be more resistant.

Col. Winter's ever-present aide ("General Hospital" hunk Steve Burton, not to be confused with my WBZ TV4 hunk colleague), the handsomest man in sight — could there be a subtext here? dunno — is on hand throughout, watching his boss begin the inevitable descent into a stripped-down version of Queeg. Irwin sees the men refusing to obey orders not to salute him and, owing to his legendary reputation, revere him. Though he has come to do his time and pay for his sin — we learn his sin later, and we, kind souls that we are, forgive him — circumstances again make the man, and as he befriends the stuttering Corporal Aguilar (Clifton Collins, Jr.), sizes up the duplicitous Yates (Mark Ruffalo, in a layered performance), and sees what Winter is capable of, he takes charge, inspiring a focused resistance, a loyalty validating an almost Jeffersonian natural aristocracy among men, occasioning a reformation of character.

You get how this might be imagined, although purely a fortuitous arrival of a movie at a particular time, as a metaphor for our current situation: a nation not of angels but of fallible folks, content to go about our business, roused to a crusade — dare one use the word even as Muslims bristle? — to foil a tyrant. The film obeys today's cinema fatwa to make the highest ranked person, here the commanding general, black (Delroy Lindo), reinforces the stereotypes (black, Hispanic and white cons dress, speak and act according to Hollywood's Sacred Scriptures), and overplays the ending. But oh-oh say can you seeeee ... and you know the rest.

Bridging the generation gap

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

There may not be a generation gap after all.

At least that's what a number of senior citizens and students in Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate have discovered after opening up the lines of communication between the two groups.

Intergenerational activities in all three communities have provided an opportunity for seniors, children and young adults to share ideas and work on projects together. The net result is the realization that older citizens and young people may have more in common than they previously thought.

Ed Schreider, a social studies teacher at Hingham High School, took over at the helm of Y.E.A.H. (Youth and Elderly in Action in Hingham) last year.

Intergenerational meetings serve as "ice breakers," where high school students and senior citizens have a chance to discuss topics relating to both generations, including violence in society, age and gender issues, stereotyping and service projects both groups can work on together.

Last winter, Y.E.A.H. sponsored a coat drive and more than 200 were collected at the town's schools and fire station. Members of the group put together 15-20 boxes of coats and delivered them to a shelter in a truck belonging to one of the Y.E.A.H. senior citizens.

"The whole school and community were involved," Schreider said.

Hingham High School students and senior citizens also work together as a team reading to elementary school children.

"I don't get to talk with many kids that age," said Lillian Colbeck, a member of Y.E.A.H. "It's good for them to see that seniors are active."

These days, many young children don't live near their older relatives, so the intergenerational program helps fill that gap.

"I enjoy their comments. One child thought the earrings I wore were 'beautiful.'" Colbeck said with a laugh. "They make you laugh and feel so appreciated."

Members of the intergenerational group also planned a luncheon for 60 senior citizens at Hingham Community Center with the assistance of Sandra Kent, director of the Department of Elder Services. The event featured the freshman Choral Spectrum under the direction of Paul Cappers.

"Teamwork is the key word," Schreider said. "It's such an important effort and falls in line with the Hingham Public Schools mission statement commitment to learning, fulfillment of one's own potential and a spirit of service to others."

Intergenerational Club goals include sharing thoughts on issues affecting senior citizens and young people alike.

"The individual attention that's given to each senior so that they're really learning at the level they're at is just wonderfu. The seniors are very grateful to the students, and they have been very gracious to us."
Carol Barrett of the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs

"There are many shared needs and interests, which shows the generation gap isn't that great when people take the time to get to know each other and serve together for the benefit of the community, said Schreider, noting that Gertrude Stein once said people are "always the same age inside."

Y.E.A.H. is open to all high school students and senior citizens.

In Cohasset, young people and seniors work together on a number of occasions.

Earlier this year, members of the high school National Honor Society provided local senior citizens with hands-on instruction on the computers in the school library.

Carol Barrett of the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs said she'd like to start up the program again next year.

"The individual attention that's given to each senior so that they're really learning at the level they're at is just wonderful," she said. "The seniors are very grateful to the students, and they have been very gracious to us."

Once a month a lunchtime, third-graders participate in various activities at the senior center, from singing a song to performing a skit.

As part of their community service requirement, Cohasset High School Civic Chorus members volunteer at the senior center four hours a week on four different days, offering assistance wherever it's needed "as their civic duty to the town," Barrett said.

Students do everything from office work, setting up for or serving lunch, raking lawns or just chatting with senior citizens.

Hingham Y.E.A.H. member Colbeck would like to see even more interaction between senior citizens and students to find out more about each other.

"We need to make the effort to sit down next to a teenager and discuss recent current events, like the terrorist tragedy, find out what they take in school and ask their opinions about everything," she said.

In turn, students can benefit from hearing a senior citizen's point of view.

"It helps break down communication barriers," Colbeck said, "even if we just talk about the weather. Teens often get bad press. We need to focus more on the positive. I think kids are very caring and generous."

In Scituate, intergenerational relationships abound.

The high school participates in two dinner programs in the spring, one through the student council and another via a Saturday lunch program.

Young people not only prepare and serve a meal to senior citizens, but they also provide the entertainment.

"It's a great program, because

About Senior Lifestyle

In the next 10 years, the senior population is expected to increase by as much as 50 percent in Hingham. In Norwell, census figures predict people 60 and over will increase from 1,743 in 2000 to 2,495 in 2010 — an 83.2 percent jump in the graying population.

Similar figures and changes are expected in most South Shore towns (see chart inside for more details).

With that in mind we focus our Senior Lifestyle section on the growing demands and changing trends which come with an aging population. The section focuses on how South Shore seniors are meeting and conquering challenges brought on by aging. We take an in-depth look at more housing options for those over 60, how seniors are conquering the Internet and the vital role they play in our communities by offering their time and experience as volunteers in our schools and at our hospitals.

The section also explores the difficulties that come with aging — such as the increased reliance on medications to stay healthy and the associated spiraling cost of prescriptions.

As the senior population continues to rise on the South Shore, towns are increasing and diversifying programs provided by council on agings, building newer and bigger senior centers, and providing more and more services to accommodate those who choose to go that route for social activities.

Senior Lifestyle will explore these and many of the other areas that help make the senior population a vibrant and essential part of any community.

Prescription drug war

Elders fight battle to afford medication, living costs

By Dan Gravel
DGRAVEL@CNC.COM

Three years ago Joanne MacNeill of Abington was diagnosed with cancer and prescribed tamoxifen. Ten weeks ago she suffered a stroke and was prescribed blood thinning and blood pressure drugs. In total she has six prescriptions every month for which she must shell out $400.

She lives off investments and social security money, but worries the funds will soon run out.

"I don't dare stop taking the drugs. I'm afraid if I cut down on any I'll have another stroke. I don't know how much longer I will be able to afford to do this," she said.

Norma Clark, the outreach coordinator at the Abington Council on Aging tells the story of a couple who have overcome cancer and are supposed to take tamoxifen for five years. They recently said they have taken the drug for two years and can no longer afford it. Their only weapon in their battle with cancer is the hope that it will not return.

"I don't dare stop taking the drugs. I'm afraid if I cut down on any I'll have another stroke. I don't know how much longer I will be able to afford to do this."
Joanne MacNeill of Abington

When U.S. Rep. William Delahunt, D-Quincy, visited the Evanswood nursing home in Kingston last year he spoke of an elderly Cape Cod woman who was hospitalized during the winter for exposure to the cold. Said Delahunt, "When asked why she had turned down her thermostat and instead huddled under an electric blanket, she said it was the only way for her to afford her prescription medications."

There is nothing unusual about the circumstances in which these people find themselves. Their stories can be heard in councils on aging and elderly housing complexes throughout the state.

"Almost everyday someone calls and says, 'I can't afford my prescription, what am I going to do.' It's a real problem that's going to get worse before it gets better," said Clark. "We do have a lot of people having a lot of trouble with prescriptions."

A study compiled by Delahunt's office found that older Americans and others who pay for their own drugs are charged far more for prescriptions than are the drug companies' most favored customers, such as large insurance companies, health maintenance organizations and the federal government.

The report stated, "The findings show that a senior citizen in Mr. Delahunt's district paying for his or her own prescription drugs must pay, on

Most assisted living residences on the South Shore provide a number of amenities, including entertainment. Here, Dan Harlow performs a concert at Allerton House in Hingham earlier this year in memory of his former piano teacher and Allerton resident, Dorothy Whitney.

A place to call home

Assisted living centers offer more choices

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

As our South Shore population continues to age, more and more people are exploring alternative forms of housing beyond single-family homes and condominiums.

Seniors and their families are finding increased options for assisted living, housing that allows seniors to maintain a level of independence and at the same time find much-needed services and a sense of security.

By offering these variety of services, residential units and operational components, assisted living facilities pride themselves on being able to cater to a population ranging from the independent, active senior to the elderly who are frail and in need of assistance.

Lillian Glickman, Secretary of the Massachusetts Executive Office of Elder Affairs, said the state's assisted living regulations allow for flexibility in lifestyle and care.

"It is this flexibility in responding to the lifestyles and needs of seniors that make assisted living communities successful"

Lillian Glickman, Secretary of the Massachusetts Executive Office of Elder Affairs

"It is this flexibility in responding to the lifestyles and needs of seniors that make assisted living communities successful," she said. Assisted living is for anyone who doesn't need the constant care of a round-the-clock nursing facility, but does have physical or mental frailties or help managing medications.

"This is for people who want to live an independent lifestyle but still have some needs. We have people who are active and social and enjoy the community we have here," said Thomas Karnes, executive director of Allerton House at Harbor Park in Hingham, a Welch Healthcare and Retirement Group, Inc. Property.

The 70 apartment rental assisted living community has a living room, sun room, dining room, library, beauty and barber shop and general store on the grounds. All the units, which are a mix of studios, one and two bedroom apartments, have a kitchenette and housekeeping service and three meals a day are available. Fees range from $2,975 to $3,550.

Karnes said the 72 residents there, with an average age in the early 80s, live an independent lifestyle, with grandchildren and great-grandchildren visiting often, and gather among themselves often to play cards and socialize.

"Because we area smaller facility, we do have a real sense of community where everyone knows everyone. They have card parties, poker groups, the groups they sit with at meals and they really enjoy that," said Karnes.

Assisted living facilities on the South Shore vary in size and services. Some can be freestanding or part of a campus associated with a nursing care facility or hospital. Most have a variety of apartment options, with studios and one bedrooms being the most popular and two bedrooms the most scarce.

Some have "companion" options to help offset the costs. Most have basic service packages which include meals, housekeeping, assistance with medications and personal needs, and some have services specific to the needs of Alzheimer's disease and other dementia and handicaps.

Staff at the facilities include registered nurses and Licensed Practical Nurses. Fees, which are on a monthly rental schedule, are not a real estate purchase but are a lease for generally one year. Some fees, which range in price from about $2,000 to over $4,000 a month, depend on the varied levels of personal care residents need.

Some other assisted living facilities on the South Shore include Marina Place in Marina Bay, with 110 private apartments, some with scenic views of the Boston skyline. The facility has a living room, dining room and pub, a library, music room and allows pets. Residents have easy access to nearby restaurants, shops and walkways. Fees range from $2,450 to $3,900 a month.

The New England Friends Home in Hingham, owned and operated by the New England Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, is open to seniors of all religious denominations and has 18 units. The facility has a living room, library, community room and terraced gardens and fees range from $2,000 to $2,700 a month.

Sunrise Assisted Living of Cohasset, part of the Sunrise Assisted Living Inc., was designed to look and feel like a private home. A separate neighborhood provides special care for those with Alzheimer's disease and related memory disorders.

The facility has 40 units in their assisted living area and 22 in the Alzheimer's disease area. The facility has a sun room, a smoking area, a community room and a beauty shop and fees run between $2,250 and $4,650 a month.

When to consider an assisted living residence

The following information is from "Guide to Assisted Living Facilities and Continuing Care Retirement Communities" published by the Massachusetts Center for Assisted Living.

Assisted living residences are for older people who no longer feel comfortable or safe living alone, but do not need the kind of 24-hour nursing and medical care provided by nursing facilities. While assisted living residences monitor the well-being of their residents and can help coordinate health services by licensed outside agencies or providers, they do not provide these services directly. As a result, assisted living residences are generally not appropriate for people with serious medical needs.

The typical assisted living resident is a woman in her early to mid-80s. Many assisted living residents need help with personal care and remembering their medications. Assisted living is also emerging as an option for individuals with Alzheimer's disease or other cognitive impairments. These programs usually feature specially designed and secure environments, structured activity programs, and higher staff-to-resident ratios.

Services

Assisted living residences combine apartment-like living with a variety of support services, including meals, assistance with activities of daily living (ADLs) such as bathing, dressing and walking, 24-hour security and on-site staff to respond to emergencies and help with medications, housekeeping and laundry services, and social and recreational programs.

Assisted living residences have one or two-bedroom units with entry doors that lock and private bathrooms. Some units may also have a living and sitting room. In addition to a group dining area, residences provide either a private kitchenette or access to a "country kitchen" or other communal cooking area. Units are typically furnished with a resident's personal belongings and furniture.

Oversight

All assisted living residences must be certified prior to opening and then re-certified every other year by the Massachusetts Executive Office of Elder Affairs (EOEA). EOEA also has an Assisted Living Ombudsman Program that mediates disputes brought by or on behalf of assisted living residents. For more information about certification or the Ombudsman Program, contact EOEA at 800-882-2003 or TTY 800-872-0166.

Paying for Assisted Living

Individuals entering an assisted living residence sign an annual residential contract or lease and pay a monthly fee or rent that includes the cost of housing, meals, and specified services and amenities. The cost of assisted living varies widely depending on the accommodations and services provided and can range from $1,800 to more than $4,000 per month per person, with an industry average exceeding $3,000. Often times specialized Alzheimer and dementia programs are more costly than traditional assisted living services. Some assisted living residences require payment of a one-time entrance fee as well as first and last month's rent and a security deposit.

Elders and their families considering assisted living should identify those services and amenities which are included in the monthly fee and those which are available but must be purchased at added cost. This information must be clearly stated in the contract a prospective resident is asked to sign before moving in. As with any legal document, elders and their families or advisors should carefully review the terms of the contract, particularly provisions for the return of security deposits and termination of the lease.

Most assisted living residents pay privately for their housing and support services. In addition, some private long-term care insurance policies include coverage of assisted living services in certified facilities. Check with your insurance company to find out if your policy covers assisted living services.

To date, there has been little public funding available to help low and moderate-income elders afford the cost of assisted living. Assisted living residences that received their financing from the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency (MHFA) are required to set aside 20 percent of their units for residents whose income is less than 50 percent of the area's median income.

Medicaid coverage of assisted living services is available on a limited basis for individuals who are clinically and financially eligible for Medicaid and reside in assisted living residences that participate in the Massachusetts Division of Medical Assistance's Group Adult Foster Care Program. Under that program, Medicaid (called MassHealth of Massachusetts) pays assisted-living residences for caregiver and administrative services provided to Medicaid-eligible individuals.

In addition, Massachusetts recently reinstated the SSI-G benefit that provides Supplemental Security Income (SSI) to help pay the room and board expenses of assisted living residents covered under Medicaid's Group Adult Foster Care Program.

For more information on adult foster care, call the MassHealth Customer Service Center at 1-800-841-29; or call 1-800-772-1213 for SSI eligibility.

Housing Options

Demand surges for over-55 housing options

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

The housing market is playing catch-up to the fastest growing segment of the population: those over 55. And as baby-boomers on the South Shore begin to approach retirement age, the real estate market here is trying to meet the housing needs of this large, and diverse, group.

Prentiss Shillingford of DeWolfe Real Estate in Norwell said housing geared toward empty nesters is one of the fastest growing markets in the area.

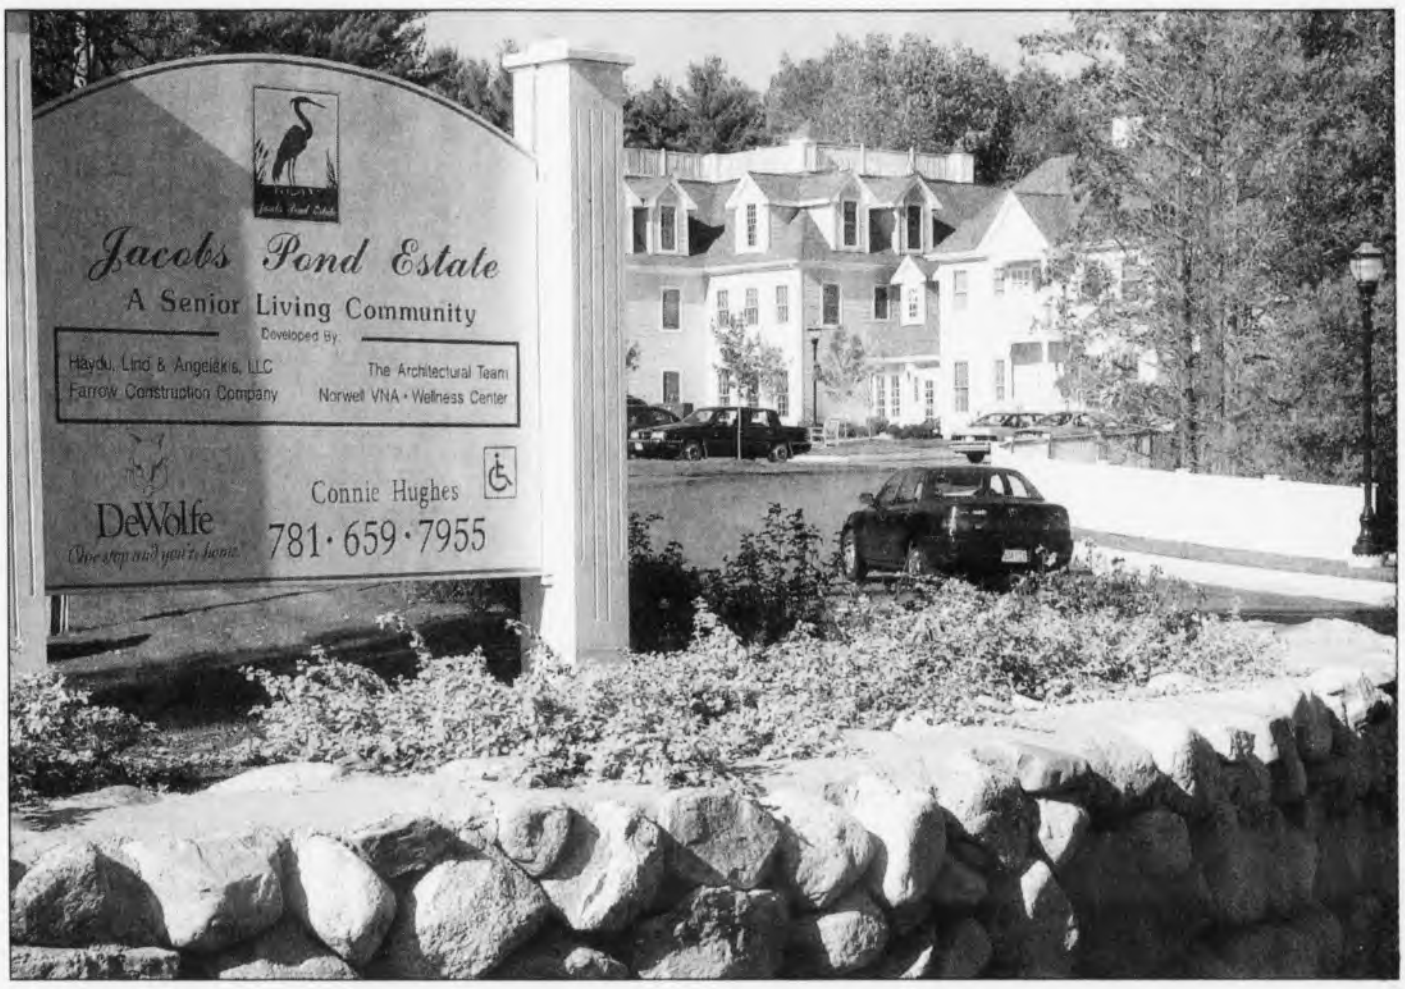
"This has become a very popular area of housing, and one in which there has been a tremendous, ongoing need within the past six years or so," said Shillingford.

"We've seen a number of people who have lived in, and enjoyed their family homes for many years, but now their lives are very different with children grown. They need relief from the chores of a home, but still want independence."

Prentiss Shillingford of DeWolfe Real Estate in Norwell

"We've seen a number of people who have lived in, and enjoyed their family homes for many years, but now their lives are very different with children grown. They need relief from the chores of a home, but still want independence," she said.

Shillingford said many empty nesters and retirees are reluctant to move out of state to areas known for having communities for those over 55.



"In many cases, they are very active in their community or still work, and many don't want to live far away from their children and grandchildren. They have roots set down here, and want to stay here," she said.

Shillingford said two projects they are marketing, Jacob's Pond Estate in Norwell and Doctor's Hill in Scituate, are geared toward the empty nester who wants to stay on the South Shore.

Jacob's Pond, for people over age 62, is in Norwell at the corner of Routes 53 and 123. Units feature two bedrooms, two baths and single floor living. According to Constance Hughes, the broker for the project, only five of the original 44 units are remaining. Jacob's Pond has been open since September of 2000, and units are priced between $239,000 and $309,000.

"It has answered a real need in the community. People here are very active and they want to be close to their children and grandchildren. Some have residences in warmer areas for the winter months, but want a place to come here in the spring and summer," said Hughes.

Hughes said residents take advantage of the on-site Visiting Nurses programs offered and spend time at the nearby shopping malls, restaurants and YMCA.

Jacobs Pond Estates in Norwell recently opened and provides housing for people over 55.

The library is one of the most popular common areas at The Village at Duxbury, a community offering the benefits of home ownership without the headaches of property maintenance, for people age 62-plus.

Luxury and amenities are plentiful at Jacobs Pond Estates.

"People here like the security, too. No one can get in unless they are beeped in by a resident. And when they want to go out of town, they just turn the key and their place is looked after," said Hughes.

In Scituate, Doctor's Hill is a community of 32 homes scheduled to be built on 40 acres of land bordering the "Tack Factory Pond." Ownership is targeted to the empty nester family with at least one member being 55 or older.

Town homes, which run in the low to mid $400,000 range, have two bedrooms, two bathrooms, full basements and walk-in attic, two-car attached garages, central air conditioning, 10-foot ceilings and 2,400 square feet of living area.

Shillingford said these kinds of projects are a burgeoning trend on the South Shore. "We still have some land available here , while there is not as much available nearer the city. And the trend is accelerated by the number of young families looking to buy the homes of empty nesters," said Shillingford, who said there are "stirrings" in several South shore towns for projects like these.

In Duxbury, a senior living community is expending their housing options with the construction of 30 single-family homes within The Village at Duxbury, a successful senior living community created by the Welch Group of Norwell.

Village at Duxbury Executive Director Carey Alexander said that while The Village at Duxbury has previously consisted of apartments, the new Garden Homes are being built in response to a growing group of older adults who want to live in a professionally managed community with services such as maintenance, fitness and fine dining, but who want single family homes.

The Garden homes will be priced in the high $300,000 range to the low $400,000s, according to Bonnie Jernigan, a spokeswoman for the project.

"There is a tremendous demand, almost an urgency, for this type of thing," said Jernigan, who said 20 people have put down a deposit on the homes that places them on a priority list.

"The proof is in the pudding. The response is there," said Jernigan, who said owners can choose options for their homes, like lofts, sun rooms, appliances and floor and wall coverings.

Jernigan said this project is different from many others because the housing style is single family, rather than townhouse or condominium.

"They will have attached garages, landscaped lawns. It will be like living in a family home, but without the hassle of maintenance and with all the services the Village at Duxbury provides," she said.

In Hingham, a large project proposed by the Erickson Retirement Community Group — who run Brooksby Village in Peabody — is in the permitting phase.

The project, with 2,600 proposed units, will have a "staggering" impact on housing in the area, according to Hingham real estate broker Gail Peterson Bell.

"It would fill a huge need and it would free up a lot of housing in the area," said Bell of the project, which is proposed for Route 53.

While the project proposed for Hingham is not approved yet, similar Erickson projects include one and two bedroom units within a campus with health care services, walking trails, dining services and day trips offered.

"I think people in the area would be very receptive to a project like this. There is definitely a need for this type of housing in the area," said Bell.

Lifetime of Learning

LETS learn

Program is seniors' gateway to lifelong education

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JMR@SOUTHCOM.COM

Explore Mayan architecture. Surf the choppy waters of the Internet. Hear about Ireland from the time of John Kennedy's forebears to the present.

Dabble in art.

This is just a sampler of the academic fare available through the LETS educational program for seniors at the Boston campus of the University of Massachusetts.

All the members of LETS, which stands for Life Enrichment Through Studies, are 50 or older and retired or partially retired.

"LETS provides a learning experience at a modest cost that will enrich the intellectual, social, and cultural lives of people who share a love of lifelong learning, regardless of their formal education," Program Coordinator Mary McCarthy said.

There are no credentials, academic or otherwise, required. There are no tests, no papers, and no degrees.

"Anybody can join. You don't need any kind of credentials. All you need is a love of learning," McCarthy said.

The only essential ingredients are an interest in being part of an academic environment, the desire to participate actively in small seminars with other seniors, and having an open mind about sharing skills and ideas.

Some facilitators are actually LETS members who volunteer their time to share an interest.

"These people really love to learn," McCarthy said. "Members tell us they take courses that truly enrich their lives."

This year, there are 250 seniors enrolled. Many students are from Weymouth, Braintree, and all over the South Shore. Most of the LETS instructors, called facilitators, are retirees. Many of them are retired or current UMass Boston faculty.

McCarthy is in her third year as LETS program coordinator. McCarthy is a nurse working in community health who earned a Manning Certificate for the Gerontology Institute at UMass.

She chose to work with LETS because she was so impressed with the program.

Joanne Palmieri, of South Weymouth enjoys reading a the Tufts Library.

"I'm interested in learning, and I'm interested in working with interesting people. This is a very exciting program," McCarthy said.

Computer courses are always popular.

"Many people have become computer literate," McCarthy said.

The program, established in 1999, is sponsored by the Gerontology Institute at UMass Boston and affiliated with the Elderhostel Institute Network.

There are nearly 40 non-credit courses and seminars, including courses on computer and Internet savvy, literature, politics, art, contemporary history, Boston history, genealogy, the 20th century presidents, and science frontiers.

"Anybody can join. You don't need any kind of credentials. All you need is a love of learning."

Mary McCarthy, LETS program coordinator

A sampling of some of the other offerings include: the Harry Potter Phenomenon; Making Gardens: Window Boxes or Wild Estates; Diseases: Past, Present, and Future; and Herstory: Women Tell Their Stories.

Courses meet once a week during the day for about 90 minutes and run from four to eight weeks.

Most seminars are held at the UMass Harbor campus, a short walk from the Massachusetts Archive building and the John F. Kennedy Library. The campus is accessible by public and private transportation. Parking is available for a small fee.

The director of LETS is Wichian Rojanawon, a policy analyst. LETS has a peer Board of Directors. The chairman is Charlotte Yacker.

LETS members have free access to UMass Boston's library and athletic facilities on the campus.

There is also access to preventative health programs such as Yoga, Tai Chi, and meditation. A small fee may apply for these programs.

The two semester program begins in early September and runs through June. The program is currently in the middle of the fall semester. The first semester ends in mid-December. The second semester goes from March to mid-June.

For a $100 cost for the year, participants can take two to three courses, attend brown bag lunches with topics like Mayan archeology, and take part in social events, including holiday parties. There are also off-site trips to places such as the Museum of Science.

More information about LETS is available by visiting Web site www.geron.umb.edu/lets_index.htm or calling 617-287-7312.

Senior entrepreneurs recognized

By Tom Gorman
TGORMAN@SOUTHCOM.COM

When most people reach their late 50s, thoughts of retiring from decades of work are entertained.

For some, however, approaching the golden years means starting a new venture.

"Our goal is simply to recognize their (seniors) efforts as special and valuable, and in doing so, encourage them to keep showing us the life fulfillment of being Elderpreneurs."

Noreen Carey-Neville

Since 1993, dozens of South Shore seniors have been honored by South Shore Elderpreneurs for developing a new business or public service effort.

Noreen and Peter Carey-Neville, owners of Carey-Neville Insurance of Weymouth, developed the South Shore Elderpreneurs, which recognizes senior entrepreneurs at an annual breakfast.

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce collaborated with the couple in developing the program, which is sponsored by ElderCorps of Cambridge, a non-profit organization that supports productive aging.

"Our goal is simply to recognize their (seniors) efforts as special and valuable, and in doing so, encourage them to keep showing us the life fulfillment of being Elderpreneurs," said Noreen Carey-Neville.

Each year, nominations are received for the Elderpreneur of the Year Award. Those 55 years old and over who have an initiated an enterprise on the South Shore are eligible.

The criteria include a change within an existing business or organization, a public service effort, a new business venture, an educational opportunity, a grassroots community volunteer program, an arts or recreational program, leadership on a board of directors, or development of apprenticeship and mentor programs in schools and/or organizations.

"Elderpreneurs are not your typical 'senior market,'" said Carey-Neville. "They are the producers, the movers, and the shakers."

Here are some examples of past honorees.

Fannie Crawford, as a resident of the Colonial Nursing and Rehabilitation Center in Weymouth, served as president of the Regional Residents Council of 35 nursing homes and three rest homes in 11 communities.

At the age of 88, she used her experiences working with Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. during the freedom movement and as a youth counselor in Tennessee to inspire residents to speak up to nursing home administrators and tell them what changes they would like to see.

Richard Burgess of Kingston, at 68, started his own business helping school systems recover public funds for students entitled to benefits under Medicaid and Chapter 766. In fact, the year before, he was asked to serve as interim superintendent of Marshfield, where he retired in 1989 after a 35 year career.

Barbara Putnam, at 59, co-founded the Weymouth Food Pantry and the Weymouth Council for the Hungry. She also helped start the Weymouth Food Cooperative, enabling families to purchase groceries without the middle man involved.

Barbara went back to school to learn how to write grant proposals for federal and state funding. Her ability to organize and recruit volunteers has made the Weymouth Food Pantry a model for others to follow.

William Mitchell of Pembroke retired from 37 years as a letter carrier at the age of 55. Less than a year after he retired, he felt that he had done everything he never had time to do while he was working, so he decided to try his hand at teaching. A four year stint as a substitute teacher at the South Shore Vocational Technical High School led to a job at the South Shore Collaborative. Later, he returned to the vo-tech as a full-time substitute.

"Elderpreneurs remind us that productive changes require passion, vision, and hard work, and that there is no substitute for experience," said Ron Zoolack, president of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce.

Giving Back

Paul and Gloria Leonard have a combined 28 years experience volunteering at South Shore Hospital. They say the rewards are many.

Coming to the hospital's aid

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@GNC.COM

Sometimes helping other people ends up in helping yourself the most.

Paul and Gloria Leonard, volunteers at the South Shore Hospital in Weymouth, love nothing more than coming to work and helping others.

"The longer we are volunteers the more we like it," Paul said.

Volunteering gives the Leonards, and many other seniors, an outlet to occupy what may otherwise be downtime by themselves.

Married for 52 years and living in Hingham for the last 20, the Leonards have been working at the hospital for a combined 28 years. Coming to work at eight in the morning two to three days a week hasn't deterred the couple. "I tell people that I can't make any plans or appointments on days that I'm volunteering, it's that important to me," Gloria said. The two have different jobs within the hospital.

"(Without the senior volunteers) would not be able to provide the customer service we've come to expect. They are the fabric of the hospital."

Rick Posniak, director of public affairs at South Shore Hospital

Paul works as a hospital escort. He takes patients and family members of patients from one area of the hospital to another and answers any questions they may have. Paul is relatively new to volunteering but not Gloria.

Gloria has been volunteering her entire life and even received an award for her efforts from the National Conference of Christians and Jews. She helped to raise more than $85,000 for the New England Medical Center. "I always liked volunteering. This is what I want to do," Gloria said.

Gloria works in the in-patient surgical waiting unit and helps to try and ease people's worries. "I listen a lot. People come in here with a lot of fears about procedures they've never had done before. I try to help them ease those fears."

Rick Posniak, director of public affairs at the hospital, estimates that of the 700 volunteers at the hospital 75 percent are over the age of 60. Posniak said the volunteers work in a variety of areas including the emergency unit, maternity ward, surgery, escort services, registration, the gift shop and other clinical areas.

Without the seniors' help, Posniak said, the hospital, "would not be able to provide the customer service we've come to expect." The seniors provide thousands of hours of volunteering in various units that would otherwise be costing the hospital a lot of money. "They are the fabric of the hospital," Posniak said.

While the Leonards don't get paid they say there are plenty of other benefits. "When a doctor gives me a smile while I'm talking to a family member of a patient or I get a handshake at the end of the day, that's my thank-you," Gloria said.

The Leonards say their experience at the hospital has given them a new outlook on life. "We thank God that we are still able to volunteer," they said. Being through many of the procedures that the hospital patients are going through, has enabled the couple to relate to the patients' experiences.

What would they be doing if they weren't volunteering? "Probably fighting with each other," Paul joked. Volunteering has given the Leonards enormous opportunities to get out of the house and meet plenty of new people.

Posniak stressed that the hospital is always looking for more volunteers, especially with the opening of the new maternity, surgery and emergency center in five weeks. If you are interested you can contact Rick Posniak at the South Shore Hospital, 781-340-8564.

Fitness through the ages

Seniors finding more appeal in local exercise programs

By Seth Jacobson

They walk long distances, perform stretching exercises and get involved with exercise routines. But these people are not gym-rats or football players — they are the senior citizens of the South Shore.

Working out and maintaining regular exercise routines are just as important to many seniors as they are to other people. More and more seniors seem to be heading out and getting involved with fitness programs in local gyms and community centers in an effort to feel better and live longer.

"As it stands now, the biggest influx into our programs is the 50-plus crowd," said Wendy Sears, owner of The Weekend Club in Marshfield. "Our oldest members are in their 70s and 80s." Sears added the establishment even has a part-time yoga instructor, Marie Forcucci, who is 74 years old.

"I never really think about my age," Forcucci said. "I can't do what I used to do but I try not to slow down that much. I just keep going."

These days, many local fitness clubs and councils on aging are promoting more exercise classes for seniors not only for physical health, but also for enriching their minds through programs like tai-chi and yoga. The bottom line is that more people are seeing the benefits of such programs.

"Exercise is good for seniors' all-around health," said Chris Kazlouski, a local aerobics instructor who heads up programs at local councils on aging. "It's important to get seniors moving, and there's also a great social aspect to any fitness program." She added the exercises she leads seniors through include muscle-relaxing techniques, stretching, walking and other aerobic exercises.

Jim Salvucci and Lynda Smethhurst, instructors from Healthtrax in Hanover, also do their part in initiating senior fitness programs at the establishment and they frequently visit local councils on aging as well.

"The most important thing for seniors is keeping active," Salvucci said. "The more they do, the more they will increase their range of motion." She added one of her students at Healthtrax is 83 years old, and noted she is seeing more seniors coming through the doors.

> Louise Connolly, 68, of Norwell

Salvucci said as people age, they start to lose their bone density, flexibility and overall strength, but with a good exercise program, those ailments can potentially be remedied. Exercising also helps with lowering cholesterol and keeping a healthy heart. She said in addition to the many programs for seniors available at Healthtrax, there's a pool where therapeutic water exercises are initiated, a concept very popular with seniors.

When it comes to how much exercise is too much for seniors, Salvucci said that factor really depends on the person.

"It depends on a person's body," she said. "One person could exercise seven days a week and another may do less. I think it's important for seniors to stay active at least three to four times a week, but when it comes to what exercises they do, it's just a matter of what each individual can handle. In the end, exercising can just lead to a longer, happier life."

"If you rest, you rust," added Louise Connolly, 68, of Norwell. Connolly takes part in the fitness program at the Norwell Council on Aging where she enjoys walking, stretching and sit-down exercises. She is dedicated, as she has been involved with the program for three years.

"People just do what they can when it comes to exercise," Connolly said. "If someone feels they can't do a certain type of exercise, then they just don't. Some people have more energy, some have less."

Dottie Lynch is one of Connolly's peers in the Norwell-based exercise program, and she said it really makes her feel healthier.

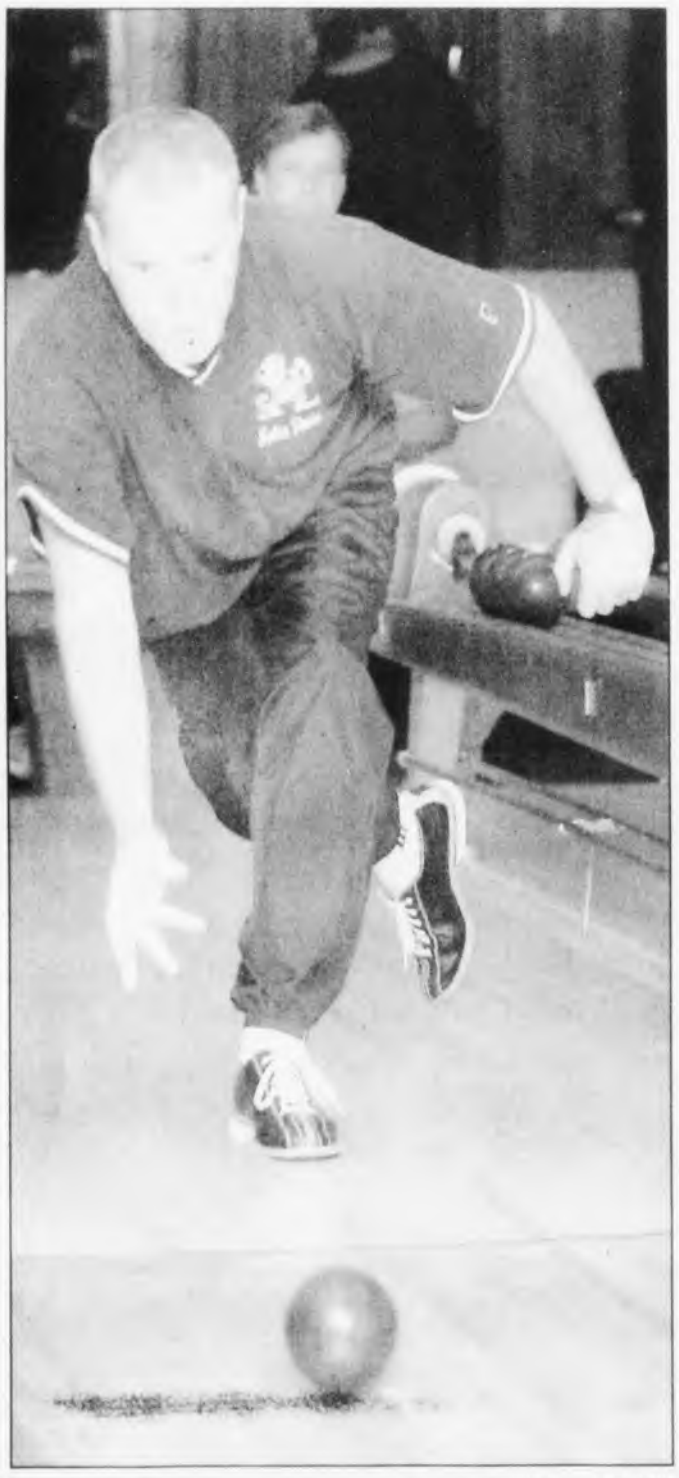
"It does help," she said. "When you get to our age, it's really important to keep your muscles moving. You have to. You're supposed to."

Forcucci said more seniors also seem to have a growing awareness of more holistic fitness like yoga, tai-chi and Pilates. She has been teaching yoga for 30 years now.

"It's done a lot for my mind and body," she said. "I've always liked the movement involved in it. I think one of the most important things for seniors is to get into whatever exercise they do slowly. You can't keep up with the young kids. Start slowly and do as much as you are able. That's all you can do. If seniors want to exercise, there's always something they can do. I think more people are realizing the importance of all these programs."

Sears said exercise is only one part of senior fitness. To maintain proper health, people have to eat right as well in order to thwart high blood pressure and cholesterol build-up.

"If it's grown on the earth, it's good to eat," Sears said. "If it comes out of a box, it's going to work through your body differently."



Sears said when all is said and done, a good exercise program and a healthy diet can make all the difference in a given senior's life.

"Everything in their lives will get better if they take care of themselves," she said. "Internally, they will feel better as well. A lot of the people who are discovering these programs are finding out that they're not letting aging get to them. It's just a matter of understanding what their limitations are."

Men being men

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@GNC.COM

Joseph Dominico steps up to the plate, his hands wrapped around the bat the same way he gripped it 40-something years ago. His eyes stay focused 45 feet in front of him, waiting for the ball to be laid right over the plate, ready to be smacked into centerfield.

With this pitch comes a lot of memories, and while the small white ball itself is meaningless, it's importance is not lost on Dominico and the other ballplayers he shares the field with at St. Mary's Church in Scituate.

Times may have changed, and while their faces show the wrinkles of a working career in its twilight or the signs of a good life led, some things — like the bat, ball, and enjoyment that comes with playing baseball or softball — never change.

It may be softball instead of baseball, and the game is sometimes played at a slower pace than when they were in their early years, but everything that comes with a field full of bodies with sport running through their veins remains constant. And the same way Little League and school leagues provided not only the opportunity to be competitive and play the game they love but also spur lasting friendships, the 30-members who descend on the diamond of eternal youth on Sundays and Wednesdays have come together because of a passion for sport.

Without the passion, there would be no sport. Without the sport, there would be a missed opportunity for friendship.

Open to men aged 55 and older, what started as a 12-member day on the baseball diamond has turned into a casual league complete with uniforms. And beyond recapturing the memories of youth, the league has enabled senior men to share the field and interact with other senior men.

"It's fun to meet other guys, to meet people," the 69-year-old Dominico said. "I didn't know all these fellows until I went there and some of them live right in my neighborhood.

Dominico, a Humarock native, shares the field with men from Marshfield, Pembroke and other South Shore towns. Open to women as well, there's only one stipulation to join: You have to be born before 1946.

"It's for the seniors, you know," Dominico said. "We don't want a bunch of young kids up here, we'd only make them look bad."

With the summer warmth slowly turning to a brisk fall chill, the social aspect of the softball league transcends mother nature. So the gentlemen will go from one "strike" to another, forming a bowling league to satisfy not only the competitive itch but also to keep the door open for seniors to come together with other seniors.

Bowling season began the morning of Oct. 16 at the Hanover Bowladrome, with the lane providing a special package available to the seniors. Shoe rental, coffee and three strings of bowling will only set you back $3. A sort of extension of the softball league, the bowling league is open to any senior man or woman, and for those with transportation problems, the Scituate Council on Aging will provide a van service if enough are interested.

It's programs like these that are not only unique to the area, but vital to it.

"There's not enough programming for men," admits Joan Wright, director of the Scituate COA, the organizations that oversees the softball and bowling league, although it was the players themselves that organized it. "One of the things that met that need was the softball league."

Wright understands the dilemma she's faced with everyday. Though providing ways for both senior men and women to meet each other, offering attractive programs to men that center on interaction is increasingly difficult. Most of the interactive senior programs in Scituate cater to women, and most are created by women themselves.

"I think women are just more used to getting together and doing things and working as groups while men are used to socializing through their careers," Wright said. "Once they retire, the socialization might hit a dead end. For some it doesn't because they get into softball or golf, but for others it's hard to find ways to socialize."

Sometimes, offering volunteer groups isn't enough. Succumbing to transportation limitations or increasing physical fatigue, many men need assistance to help meet others in their situation. But once they are brought into that element, many are receptive to meeting others.

At the luncheon program at the Cohasset Senior Center, eight seniors sit and converse thrice weekly with each other while they eat. A van comes and picks them up from their home and brings them to the senior center. It's become a mission for outreach coordinator Carol Barrett to identify seniors who have limitations at home and give them a means to meet others.

Barrett is aware that while many seniors have been living alone or detached for society for years, the social programs usually begin once they hit the age of 55. She said through the center's holiday parties, picnics and numerous field trips, the opportunity is there for seniors to meet others, and many are receptive to them. But some, whether it be due to their own indifference or a certain limitation placed on them that comes with aging, ignore the programs.

"If I see a person who is limited I try to get a senior volunteer to go out once a week and visit, take them shopping and keep them looking forward to seeing someone," Barrett said.

Similar programs exist at the senior center in Scituate, and Wright is always looking for ways to expand the curriculum. For those who are homebound, van service is available and used on a daily basis. In November, a chess club will be formed, which will serve as a compliment to the growing nutrition club and men's "8:59 Group," who meet at Jamie's Pub the first Monday of every month for breakfast.

Organizing programs that are somewhat unstructured are the keys to getting men involved, Wright said.

"I think, and this is just my own observation, that a lot of men would prefer not to do structured things," she said. "Traditionally they lived in such a structured environment, working all their lives, once they retire they don't want that structure. They want to be able to 'drop in.'"

As Scituate prepares work to build a new senior center, one of the key components is a billiards room. At town meeting last March when funding for the new center was a topic on the floor, residents scoffed at the notion of a billiards room. But Wright sees its value as a social harpoon for guys who want to be guys.

"They can come in and do their own thing," Wright said, fantasizing out loud about card and pool tables to create a "hang out" atmosphere.

"Doing their own thing" falls under the umbrella of many ideas, all centering on socialization, whether they are eating together, throwing strikes or hitting strikes. Dominico looks around him and socializes with guys he never would have if it wasn't for sports. Many of the guys at the Cohasset luncheon didn't know each other, now some are "lunch buddies" or even just basic, plain old simple "friends."

Wright and Barrett, along with other senior center directors on the South shore, strive to offer these landscapes and hope interaction comes naturally. Sometimes it does, sometimes it doesn't. For senior men who are used to living alone or unable to independently interact, socialization is difficult. More difficult than hitting a softball and more difficult than tossing a bowling ball.

Staying Active

A song in their hearts

Many senior entertainment programs involve singing and eating

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@CNC.COM

It's something she loves to do, but at times it can be difficult to endure.

Betty Bartlett, member of the local singing group The OPALs, lives for the days in which she and roughly 25 other seniors travel to nursing homes or hospitals to sing and entertain. It's swallowed up her and her husband, George, and she thrives on the excitement and anticipation her group's visit brings to an elderly man or woman.

But there are times when she must fight back the emotion, realizing the importance of the service she provides is illustrated by the very acts that almost bring her to tears.

When Bartlett and company sing at the Veterans Hospital in Brockton Nov. 9, it will be one of those times.

Side-by-side with the other OPALs, which stands for Older People Active Lifestyles, she will look into a sea of people, some standing, some confined to wheelchairs. When the group breaks into patriotic songs such as the Navy Hymn, she can see men in wheelchairs struggle to stand up. It is something they have done their entire lives, but age has stripped them of their simplest gesture of respect.

STAFF PHOTOS: ALAN CHAPMAN

Alice O'Brien sings and claps along to entertainer Peter Poirier during a performance at the Cardigan Nursing Home in Scituate.

"It's hard for us when they do that sort of thing," Bartlett admits.

But Bartlett understands the underlying theme of what she does, and that's to provide entertainment. Creating sing-alongs in centers in Marshfield, Scituate, Hull and Weymouth, the Hingham-based OPALs frequently visit roughly 25-30 places on the South Shore, ranging from senior centers to nursing homes to assisted living centers to "anyone who would like to have us," as Bartlett would say.

With the men in white shirts, black slacks and black ties and the women dressed in tune with a monthly theme (For October, orange was the color of the month), the OPALs were started 15 years ago, and their numbers, as well as performances, increase yearly.

"We just have a good time and enjoy it thoroughly," Bartlett said. "We're seniors singing to seniors. Sometimes when we go to nursing homes you look out into the audience and you can see people moving their mouths and it's so rewarding. They truly are enjoying what they are seeing."

Recently playing at the Cardigan Nursing home in Scituate, Cardigan Events Coordinator Lisa Curley is amazed at the reception the group receives.

"They are really good, really wonderful," Curley said. "It's amazing to watch some of these residents who don't normally communicate. You can see them tapping their feet, it makes it all worthwhile."

Musical entertainment highlights the week for Cardigan residents. Curley said musicians play Cardigan usually once a week, and sometimes more than that. That's what the residents want, Curley said, so that's what they get.

But that's not all entertainment is limited too. Getting out of the home itself can be entertaining for some, but the destination is just as important.

Cardigan Residents Grace Morel, Alice Lapierre, Ruth Pope and Grace Grassie sing along with entertainer Peter Poirier.

Residents at Cardigan go out to lunch and dinner frequently, but also have trips to Nantasket Beach, Chinese food and pizza parties, and a yearly fair that involves everyone in the community.

"We have a lot of (outdoor) entertainment in the summer, and in the winter we go to the mall or go shopping," Curley said. "We try to get them out and into the community as often as we can."

In Cohasset, members of the senior center can participate in a trip to Chinatown, which is currently planned for late November. By bus, seniors travel to Boston and eat lunch and shop at local markets. When they come back, a Chinese chef uses some of what they purchased and creates a full dinner meal.

Food trips are a common thing in Cohasset, according to Council on Aging Director Kathy Bryanton. And they will continue to be as long as they remain so popular.

"The board here is a very proactive organization and are always looking for ways to enhance the community," Bryanton said. "We do a lot of transportation because we are an isolated community. We go to malls and different areas and restaurants."

The Gourmet club takes frequent trips to the city to shop, learn about spices and cuts of meat and brings their North End bounty back home with them. With the help of the gourmet instructor, cooking has become a boom in Cohasset.

A Men's Breakfast Club travels around the south shore to sample fin eateries on a frequent basis, and a dozen-member Friday afternoon Book Club has turned a idle time into a bookworm's dream. In October, a Bonsai Tree demonstration put "The Karate Kid's" Mr. Miyagi to shame, and as Christmas comes closer, the fourth trip this year to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's open rehearsal is in the works.

"We have a very varied degree of programming," Bryanton said.

But with all the trips to the Hub and the guest musicians coming to town, sometimes the best forms of entertainment are the most obvious.

"Bingo, they love bingo," Curley said. "We used to play bingo once a week, then twice a week, now it's three times a week. I mean, they love bingo."

Curley has to be careful, though. Sometimes, the 25-cent games become a bit competitive. And the frequency of which bingo games are demanded forced Curley to lower the bar from 50-cent games to the quarter mark. And when a music entertainer comes to the home during a bingo time slot, Curley shifts the schedule to make sure the bingo-lovers aren't shorthanded.

Though crafts, trivia and crossword work gets the attention of some, it's the luncheons, bingo and musicians that get things together at Cardigan.

"I don't know how I'd survive a month without that entertainment," Curley said.

Seniors enjoy the silver screen, too

By Robert Aicardi
BAICARDI@CNC.COM

Films are made for young people.

When it comes to customers, Hollywood doesn't care about anyone over the age of 50.

Seniors prefer to stay home and don't like to travel to theaters.

These statements may seem accurate, but they're not.

In reality, older audiences represent a key demographic, one which is credited with helping to make box office triumphs out of such Best Picture Academy Award winners as "Driving Miss Daisy" and "Shakespeare in Love."

Only a year ago, actor/director Clint Eastwood quipped that his "fellow AARP members" were the ones responsible for turning "Space Cowboys," in which he co-starred with contemporaries Donald Sutherland and James Garner, into a hit.

Barbara Dowd, 73, of Weymouth is an example of the type of regular moviegoer who many industry analysts mistakenly claim doesn't exist.

Dowd goes to the movies at least once a week and sometimes twice a week.

A lifelong film buff, Dowd remembers seeing four movies a week while she was growing up in a small town in Maine.

Dowd's sister, who is older than she is, likes the movies, too.

Defying a media-encouraged stereotype, Dowd thinks that movies are better now than they were in the past.

STAFF PHOTO: TOM GORMAN

Barbara Dowd at the Cameo Theatrer in South Weymouth. Senior citizens say movies are a great source of entertainment and only wish Hollywood produced more flicks geared toward their generation.

"I think that movies are much more sophisticated and much more intelligent today," she says.

Although she is an admirer of the late Alfred Hitchcock, Dowd points to this summer's "The Others," a ghost story starring Nicole Kidman and featuring an ingenious surprise ending, as a thriller in the Hitchcock tradition.

"I like movies that keep you interested," she says. "I like it when I can't figure out what will happen next."

In the past year, Dowd's favorite film was "Finding Forrester," starring Sean Connery as a reclusive, J. D. Salingeresque writer who only published one novel, but she also liked "The Straight Story," "Secrets and Lies," "Little Voice," and "The Deep End."

Dowd preferred "Finding Forrester" to "Good Will Hunting," a similar story also directed by Gus Van Sant, because it lacked the earlier film's strong language.

When it comes to comedy, Dowd enjoyed "Best in Show," a mock-documentary starring and directed by Christopher Guest of "This is Spinal Tap," because it was "hilarious without being offensive."

"I think that movies are much more sophisticated and much more intelligent today."
Barbara Dowd

On the other hand, Dowd was not among those who enjoyed "American Beauty," a dark satire of suburbia, despite its critical acclaim and multiple Oscars, among them Best Actor for Kevin Spacey and Best Original Screenplay.

"I didn't like the plot," she recalls. 'There were a lot of creeps in it."

Dowd isn't hesitant to say that she doesn't take the judgment of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences too seriously, pointing to "Gladiator," its most recent top honoree.

"I saw 'Gladiator' on a boat going between Greece and Turkey, and it didn't hold my interest," she says. "It was too confusing."

Dowd thinks that Academy members should have voted for "You Can Count On Me," featuring a critically praised performance by Laura Linney which they regarded as inferior to Julia Roberts's portrayal of "Erin Brockovich."

To Dowd, it was Linney, not Roberts, who should have taken home the Best Actress Oscar.

Dowd is not a fan of John Travolta, although she acknowledges that she did enjoy "A Civil Action," in which Travolta co-starred with Robert Duvall.

When it comes to other actors, Dowd gives a thumb's up to Gene Hackman and a thumb's down to Tom Cruise.

"I don't really care for him," she says. "As far as I'm concerned, the best part of 'Jerry Maguire' was Renee Zellweger, not him."

Dowd recently enjoyed "Hearts in Atlantis," the latest film version of a Stephen King story.

"Anthony Hopkins was wonderful," she says. "He was so mysterious, but believable."

Beating the scam

County COAs have the tools to avoid being taken

By Alice Coyle

If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is.

David Pearson, the outreach coordinator for the Scituate Council on Aging finds himself offering that familiar advice all too often these days.

The most recent time was with an elderly woman who asked for some assistance reading a settlement acceptance agreement from the International Trade Corporation. This company informed the woman she had won a chance to win the Canadian National Lottery. All she had to do was send in $69.95 (the maximum participation amount to give her 10,800 chances at the big settlement amount of $1,700,000).

Pearson advised the woman not to pay anything and to throw the correspondence in the trash. While he did not call the offer mail fraud, there are enough phony contests and sweepstakes selling misrepresented or nonexistent investments in annuities, stocks, securities, precious metals or real estate, soliciting money for phony charities or selling dream vacation packages that Pearson warns all seniors to be wary of offers they get by mail.

The Canadian lottery lure is not an unusual scheme, nor is it unusual for senior citizens to bank their hopes and a considerable sum of money on the chance at a big cash prize or settlement.

While all age groups can be duped, senior citizens are often the target of scam artists whether they use the mail, the phone or meet them face to face.

"Seniors are preyed on because many of them are on a fixed income and are desperate for money," Pearson said. That desperation can lead them to take unreasonable risks they simply cannot afford. Ironically, Pearson noted, the woman considering sending the money in for the Canadian Lottery was applying for fuel assistance. "She's having a tough time paying her bills, yet she's going to send them money to try to win money," Pearson said.

Investigator Bill O'Malley of the Senior Protection Unit at the Plymouth County District Attorney's Office said elder communities are often targeted because the residents "come from a time when you could trust people a lot more than you can now."

Con artists can also capitalize on a senior citizen's loneliness by developing a relationship with them so they'll feel comfortable agreeing to the scam, O'Malley said. One recent case he recalled involved an elderly woman who made many purchases on one of the home shopping networks. She called so often she developed a relationship with one of the network saleswomen who offered to use her 10 percent shopping discount on the woman's upcoming purchases if she just sent her a check for $20,000. With an easy 20 grand in her pocket the salesperson promptly quit her job at the shopping network.

Tugging on a senior citizen's heart strings is another tactic used especially by fraudulent fundraisers done by phone, Pearson said. Often times these boiler room telemarketers use names that sound like legitimate charitable organizations to confuse people. O'Malley suggests using common sense when considering a charitable contribution. Ask questions, get phone numbers where you can reach the organization later and get as much information on the charity and its mission in writing, O'Malley said.

"With any call you get with a reputable charitable organization, they'll be happy to send you information or give you a contact number to call them," he said.

Calling your local police is another way to check up on telemarketing operations. Many charitable groups notify the police before they begin a fundraising campaign in town. Police departments are also the first to be notified of new scams operating in the area.

Tragedies like the Worcester fire that killed six firefighters two years ago, and more recently the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the country can breed new scams. Phony fundraising efforts spring up amid the good work of legitimate groups like the American Red Cross.

In Kingston, police were recently notified that a group claiming to be affiliated with the local American Legion post was conducting a drive to raise money for the Sept. 11 relief effort. Those called were asked to tape their contributions to the front door and they would be picked up. The post's adjutant officer says there is no such fundraising effort underway. O'Malley and Pearson both urge senior citizens not to leave contribution money taped to doors or in mailboxes.

Because "telefraud" is often the way scam artists do business and because telemarketers can be such a problem in general, O'Malley said his unit offers tips to help elders who have trouble getting off the line, hang up. "We give them techniques to get them off the phone," he said. "One woman, didn't want to be rude and hang up so she simply picked up her Bible and began reading it to the telemarketer until they hung up."

O'Malley reminds elders never to give account numbers, credit card numbers or even their social security numbers over the phone unless they've initiated the call themselves.

There are also a variety of person-to-person scams perpetrated against trusting elders. In many cases preventing these scams is as simple as not letting any strangers into your home.

"My biggest campaign lately is 'don't open the door to strangers,' " said Pearson, who tries to balance the need to offer sound, common sense advice without scaring residents.

The "home repairman" is a popular scheme against the elderly, notes O'Malley. In this scenario, a "repair man" comes to the door and tells the homeowner that their driveway or siding or roof is in need of repair. He then explains that he's just finished work on a house up the street and has extra materials and could do the work on their home at a discounted rate. If any work is done at all, it's usually shoddy and done with inferior materials. In the case of driveway work, O'Malley said the paving usually "melts or runs off with the first rain."

In other cases, a couple of con artists make up a story about car accidents or break downs and ask to come in to use the phone. While one distracts the homeowner, the other person moves around the house stealing valuables. Again, refusing to entry to strangers is the best way to prevent theft, Pearson said.

Pearson just recently brushed up on scams at the Plymouth County Elder Abuse Conference on Elder Safety in the Community. The day-long program hosted by O'Malley's unit is part of the on-going work with all the counties COAs to spread awareness and help in the prevention of scams. "We try to get to everyone each year and present information on new scams," O'Malley said, noting that the more people know the less likely they are to be duped.

One of the challenges in investigating scams and finding the perpetrators behind them is the fact that those who have been victimized very rarely inform the authorities. Reporting rates for this crime are estimated at between 3 and 8 percent — the lowest of any major crime.

"Part of the problem is when people realize they've been scammed, they're too embarrassed to report it." They may also believe that the police won't be able to catch the culprit and get their money back.

There is also help for victims of scams. O'Malley's office or your local COA can give you a list of tips and resources to call if you think you've been swindled including a number of credit bureau fraud units.

But O'Malley and Pearson continue to prescribe the "ounce of prevention" mindset.

"Our job is to be preventative and get the information out there before it happens," O'Malley said.

Help for victims of fraud

PSW ACTION STEPS TO HELP VICTIMS

• Contact all creditors by phone and in writing. Alert them to the problem.

• Call U.S. Postal Inspection Service (www.usps.gov/postalinspectors).

• Contact elder's local police department (remind them about identity fraud law, G.L. c.266, Section 37E, if they say there is nothing they can do).

• Call each of the three credit bureaus' fraud units. Ask to have a "Fraud Alert/Victim Impact" statement placed in the elder's credit file and ask to have the elder's file "taken offline," which forces creditors to call either the PSW, Money Manager or the elder before opening any new accounts.

• Alert elder's banks to flag elder's accounts and contact PSW or elder to confirm any unusual or attempted activity. Request a change of PIN for elder if that person uses an ATM or other PIN-activated instrument.

• Contact the Registry of Motor Vehicles to see if another license was issued in the elder's name. If so, request another license with an S number (as opposed to the social security number), and fill out any RMV complaint form to begin the fraud investigation process.

• Call the Social Security Administration Fraud Hotline, 1-800-269-0271.

• Call the Federal Trade Commission, 1-877-IDTHEFT.

PREVENTION STEPS FOR ELDERS

• Promptly remove mail from the mailbox after delivery.

• Deposit outgoing mail in post office collection mailboxes or at the post office, not in unsecured mail receptacles.

Reducing junk mail, unsolicited phone calls

If you are receiving unwanted phone calls and/or unwanted junk mail, you can reduce some of this intrusion into your life by writing to the following:

For mail: Mail Preference Service, Direct Marketing Association, P.O. Box 9008, Farmingdale, NY 11735-9008. Necessary information: Send home address and names of household members to be removed from direct marketers.

For phone calls: Telephone Preference Service, Direct Marketing Association, P.O. Box 9014, Farmingdale, NY 11735-9014. Necessary information: Send name(s) of registered phone subscribers, home address, and home telephone number (including area code) to remove names from participating national telemarketing lists.

Caution: Do not assume that taking this step will eliminate all junk mail or unsolicited phone calls. In fact, this procedure, while very helpful, may not actually deter a fraudulent telemarketer or mail fraud artist from reaching you.

Affairs of the Heart

Oliver and Dorothy Volpe celebrated 61st wedding anniversary on Oct. 24.

Golden love story

A swallow at The Hollow begins a 61-year romance

By Cathy Conley
CCONLEY@CNC.COM

It all began with a swallow at The Hollow 62 years ago.

Big football star Ollie Volpe had stopped in for a swallow with a bunch of his buddies.

At the same time, a beautiful young woman named Dorothy Devine stopped into the Quincy restaurant known for its jingle "Have a swallow at The Hollow."

Ollie and Dorothy's eyes met. They started flirting. Before Dorothy knew it, Ollie and his buddies were in the back seat of her car asking her and her friends for a ride home.

Ollie called the next day, and their romance began.

Ollie grew up in Quincy. He won a football scholarship to Villanova, where he played under Coach Harry Stulhldreher, one of Notre Dame's famed Four Horsemen.

He earned a renowned reputation playing offense and defense on the gridiron, along with a bachelor of science degree.

Dorothy graduated from Fay School in Boston and was a secretary in a local firm.

Ollie immediately won over Dorothy's family.

They recognized his strength of character and his strength of muscle, especially the day he singlehandedly lifted a car for her brother which had a flat tire.

"My family loved him. They couldn't believe how strong he was," Dorothy said.

Ollie was a principal of Volpe and Sons Granite Company and later Dimascio Brothers Construction Company in Quincy.

The granite company sent Ollie to Atigonish, Nova Scotia to head a team mining for black granite. The mining didn't pan out. Ollie and his team moved on to a gold mine in Isaac's Harbor.

Ollie was very lonely. It was brutally cold, and the winter had not started.

"So he calls one day and tells me he needs somebody to darn his socks," Dorothy said. This was his proposal.

Dorothy asked her parents' permission. They said yes. Not only that, they followed her to Nova Scotia for the wedding.

"Ollie put them up in a house in Isaac's Harbor. They were very happy until they found out there were dead bodies stored in the house," Dorothy said. It was a mortuary. It was too cold to bury the bodies until the spring.

Dorothy's folks found another place.

On Oct. 24, 1960, Dorothy and Ollie Volpe were wed in a tiny Catholic Church in Lockharbor with only her folks and the parish priest, Fr. McLaughlin, in attendance.

Fr. McLaughlin married the young couple, provided the music, and served them bacon and eggs in the rectory for their reception.

And thus Olivio Demenico Victorio Volpe and his bride were wed.

"If I knew that was his name, I couldn't have married him in the first place," Dorothy quipped.

They settled into a little apartment which was "so cold the linoleum on the floor curled," according to Ollie.

To say housekeeping was new to the young bride was an understatement.

"My mother visited one time, and Ollie's handkerchiefs were stiff as a board frozen on the line. I had overstarched them. She never got over it," Dorothy laughed.

"Everything came out of a can. If it didn't come out of a can, we didn't eat," Ollie said.

The young bride soon learned how to cook to such a degree that she soon won cooking contests with her culinary talents.

From gold mining, Ollie went on to become a charter member and president of the Utilities Contractors Association of New England. He graduated from Boston College Law School and maintained a private law practice in Braintree for many years.

He was even "Jolly Ollie," drumming up business for a Dale Carnegie course at one time.

Her served his community as a member of Town Meeting, the Capital Planning Board, and the High School Building Committee and the Republican Town Committee.

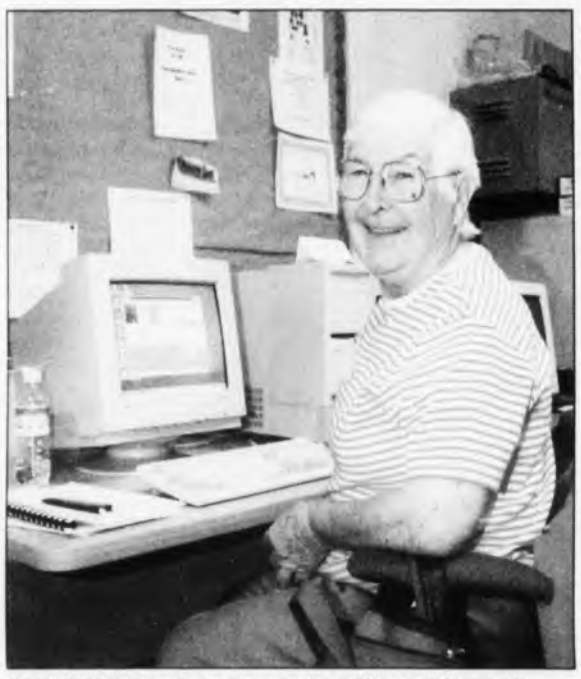
Conquering Challenges

A window to the world

Seniors give seniors a new view of Internet, computers

By Mary Ford
MFORD@WCVB.COM



Jerry Watts likes being a "tour guide" to the world. But the 64-year-old, retired American Airlines employee is no travel agent. The people and places that he helps his fellow senior citizens visit are all on the Internet.

"I teach the online class," Watts says about SeniorNet computer classes at Massasoit Community College in Brockton. "I show class members how to get on the Internet, use e-mail, chat rooms and how to go surfing — that kind of thing."

SeniorNet — an international nonprofit organization based in San Francisco that is some-40,000 members strong — provides older adults computer education and access to computer technology.

Kathleen Reid, coordinator of the Senior Center at Massasoit, says the local SeniorNet learning center draws people ages 50-and-up from all over the South Shore.

"The program is taught by senior volunteers who were trained by us," she says. A small army of about 30 volunteers teaches a range of computer classes including word processing, Quicken [a financial management program], graphics, Windows, genealogy, spreadsheets, and introduction to computers for beginners. The classes are small and include an instructor and an assistant called a "coach." Before participation in computer classes which range from $20-$30, membership to SeniorNet, is required. In addition to access to the classes, the $30 annual membership fee includes a subscription to SeniorNet's quarterly newsletter and discounts on products.

Hanne Middletom navigates the computer at Massasoit Community College.

"Some have no experience at all and are afraid to turn the computer on while others want to run spreadsheets — it really runs the gamut."

— Diane Moran, volunteer instructor

Reid says those who participate range in age from 50 to a 90. Reasons for walking through the door, include wanting to learn to use e-mail to talk to grandchildren, track stocks, find a travel deal or order groceries on line, to name a few.

"Most have a life-long interest in learning," Reid says about the senior age group. "And they want to learn about computers."

Former teacher Diane Moran, 63, who spent the 15 years in computers as a technology specialist with the Brockton Public Schools, says the classes attract those with a range of experience.

"Some have no experience at all and are afraid to turn the computer on while others want to run spreadsheets. It really runs the gamut," says the volunteer instructor.

Moran says the hands-on aspect of learning how to use computers is really helpful.

"The reinforcement is very quick — we talk about it and they do it immediately," she says.

Watts, who lives in Randolph, says the senior "chat rooms" are a real hit with the students. Chat rooms are locations on the Internet where computer users can interact using the keyboard in discussion groups world wide.

"They are never alone," Watts says. "No matter what hour of the day or night — there is an instant support group; there is always someone to talk to."

Watts tells his students not to be afraid of computers.

"If you see a button and you don't know what it is, I say 'push it,'" he says. "There's no need to be embarrassed or ashamed because a three-year-old knows more about it than we do.

"When I call my 16-year-old nephew to help me, if he gets smug — I tell him to sit down and conjugate a verb or multiply something on paper and then say, 'now who's the dummy?'" Watts says with a laugh.

Watts explains that SeniorNet only allows seniors to teach seniors.

"We know how seniors think," he says. "I can say 'I'm having a senior moment' and not have to explain that to anyone."

Aging affects driving ability

By Paula Woodhull
PWOODHULL@PCNC.COM

Senior citizens make up a sizable portion of the population and are on the roads in record numbers.

With this trend in mind, the American Association of Retired Persons has developed a safe driving program, called 55-Alive, that aims to lower the risk of accident and injury to seniors and other motorists.

Safe driving programs for seniors are especially important in light of a recent report issued by the Insurance Institute for Safety. The study found that, as the general population ages, drivers over 65 will be involved in a quarter of all fatal crashes by the year 2030.

As drivers get older, they may notice many physical changes that affect their driving skills, according to the AARP. These include taking longer to react to changing conditions on the road — for example, a patch of ice, or an oncoming car swerving to avoid an animal.

Other seniors may experience problems with their vision with each passing year — an inability to quickly read approaching road signs, or distinguish between red, green and yellow traffic lights, for example.

Many seniors experience hearing difficulties with advancing age while others may face psychological changes — becoming disoriented when traveling to an unfamiliar part of town, for example.

These are just some of the issues the AARP's 55-Alive program addresses.

The Pembroke Council on Aging held a well-attended safe driving workshop sponsored by the AARP this year. Seniors may qualify for an insurance discount if they take part in a safe driving course. This helpful safety program is available to other senior centers, as well.

Pembroke COA Director Mary Willis agreed that most seniors are looking for ways to improve their safe driving skills. Seniors don't want to be a danger to themselves and others on the road.

Many communities, like the Pembroke COA, even offer seniors rides to medical and other appointments when they don't feel up to driving themselves.

But until seniors reach the point where they no longer feel competent to drive, there are ways to make the driving experience a safer one — for everyone.

Willis said seniors should pay attention to warnings on any medication they are taking. "Seniors should be very careful about taking medication and driving," she said. "Don't drive if you feel drowsy."

The U. S. Food and Drug Administration has found that some 50 percent of all medications taken by seniors react adversely in some way with medication.

Another trouble spot for elderly drivers is making turns. "Left turns are the worst when you're older," Willis said. "Depth perception is a problem for older drivers." Depth perception also affects parallel parking skills.

Joseph Collins, 67, of Pembroke, enrolled in the 55-Alive program and found it tremendously helpful.

"A lot of it was a refresher course for what people have learned over the years," said Collins. "The people who signed up for the course stuck right with it."

"A lot of it was a refresher course for what people have learned over the year. The people who signed up for the course stuck right with it."

Joseph Collins of Pembroke

One simple exercise for elderly drivers is to familiarize themselves thoroughly with the controls inside their vehicle, Collins advised.

Senior citizens can find themselves getting confused when they are behind the wheel of an automobile, especially with the increase in traffic on local roads, and increased speeds.

It might seem obvious, but Collins said many accidents are caused by an elderly motorist fumbling for the defrost or the windshield wiper, for example.

"You should be completely aware of where the controls are" and how they work, said Collins.

Another tip Collins found helpful is that elderly drivers should avoid crowded, high-speed roadways with difficult merge lanes, and instead should take a longer, back route to their destination.

This approach spare's everyone's nerves. "If you're harassed on the road by someone who's going faster than you are, pull over and let them pass. Don't make a big deal out of it," said Collins.

Federal safety officials have long recognized that today's roads are hardly user friendly for seniors. A 1997 Federal Highway Administration study found that older drivers would benefit significantly if road signs were larger and easier to read.

To compensate for diminished vision, the 55-Alive program recommends wearing eyeglasses, if prescribed, sunglasses when glare is a problem and also advises that seniors limit the amount of night driving they do.

To adjust for reaction-time delay, the 55-Alive program tells seniors to increase the distance between them and the car in front of them.

Probably the most fearful question seniors face as they age is when to give up their license.

The 55-Alive program advises that seniors "regularly evaluate" their driving performance. The AARP strongly suggests that seniors who are having trouble with their driving look into other transportation options in their communities.

These would include walking, carpooling with friends and family members, taking a taxi, using public transportation, and special transportation services offered by the community.

Helping seniors combat their fears

By Ed Baker
EBAKER@CNC.COM

When a national crisis such as the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks occurs, it can cause considerable stress for housebound seniors, many who live alone and do not have family members living nearby. All too often, housebound seniors are forced to sort out their fears without anybody to share them with. These fears can seem especially frightening for a senior whose daily contact with the outside world is largely through television, which has been inundated with reports of anthrax and the war on terrorism.

"It can be a pretty frightening thing for a person who is alone with just a TV and see terrible things happening and not have somebody to talk with."

— South Shore Elder Services director Edward Flynn

Ed Flynn, executive director of South Shore Elder Services, says since Sept. 11 seniors living alone even more than ever need personal contact.

The South Shore Elder Services program is trying to ease the fears many seniors are facing by providing them a friendly ear. The elder services program also has various volunteer groups and churches who will listen to their concerns.

SSES director Edward Flynn says he is concerned about the emotional impact of the terrorist attacks against the nation on the senior population. Within days after the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11, he sent a letter to nearly 2,000 housebound seniors that urged them to share any fears they might be experiencing since the attacks with SSES staff.

"The biggest concern I had was seniors who are living alone," says Flynn. "It can be a pretty frightening thing for a person who is alone with just a TV and see terrible things happening and not have somebody to talk with."

Current events such as the recent tragedy and war raging in Afghanistan sometimes trigger emotional responses for seniors, who might recall their own unpleasant wartime memories. Some of these recollections may include the death of a family member in World War II, fears they experienced during a civil defense blackout drill or a possible attack against the nation..

Flynn has received few responses from seniors to his letter to date. "Most of the responses were statements of thanks for being considerate," he added. "Some seniors also recalled their memories of World War II in which a brother served."

Flynn says seniors are sometimes uneasy about revealing their feelings, but are appreciative when concern is shown to them. "Sometimes they just need a reassuring voice over the phone," he added. "The message we're trying to get out to them is there are people out there they can call who will listen to them."

SSES officials have also sent out a newsletter to various caregivers and supporters that urges neighbors who live near a housebound senior to tactfully check on their well being. "If you have an older neighbor this is the time to check on them," added Flynn. "It has to be done in a way that is not intrusive."

SSES assists nearly 15,000 seniors in the eleven towns it serves. Communities served by SSES include; Braintree, Weymouth, Holbrook, Hingham, Norwell, Scituate, Cohasset, Randolph, Hull, and Quincy. SSES provides a variety of practical services to area seniors. Some of these programs include daily lunches through the national "Meals on Wheels," program.

SSES also has case managers who visit seniors that maybe at risk for neglecting their health or being abused emotionally or physically by family members. The elder services program provides volunteers who visit housebound seniors and brighten their day by providing them with friendly conversation or assisting them with errands. Additional information about SSES can be obtained by calling 781-383-9790 or at the organization's web site, www.sselder.org.

Citizens energy offer assistance

The start date for the Citizens Energy Oil Heat Program is early December 2001.

The program offers a one-time delivery of up to 175 gallons of home heating oil for one-half of the state-wide average retail price for low-income, working poor, and elderly households. This effort is designed to help households that are low-income, as well as those that are experiencing a sudden financial need due to a household emergency. Households that receive a benefit through the federal Fuel Assistance Program must exhaust that benefit first prior to applying for the Citizens' program.

Citizens Energy and the statewide network of Community Action Agencies are administering the program. The application process is completed over the phone.

This program is meant to help households with their winter heating needs only. Assistance will be available until mid-March, or until the program's supply of two million gallons of heating oil is exhausted.

Currently, there are over 300 oil dealers across the state working with Citizens Energy by delivering oil at a reduced price to their customers in need. If an individuals oil dealer is not participating in this program, they will be referred to participating dealers in their area.

How Households Can Apply: starting in early December households in need can call 1-877-JOE-4-OIL. (1-877-563-4645) or their local Community Action Agency to apply for help over the phone.

When to consider a continuing care community

The following information is from "Guide to Assisted Living Facilities and Continuing Care Retirement Communities" published by the Massachusetts Center for Assisted Living.

Continuing care retirement communities (CCRCs) combine independent retirement housing, assisted living services and nursing facility care - usually on the same campus - to allow elders to have their current and future care needs met at one location. As a resident's needs change, he or she can choose from among the services available. CCRCs have become a popular option for older people who no longer want the responsibility of caring for a house and want the peace-of-mind of knowing that they have taken care of their future long term care needs.

Most UL-KCs require incoming residents to be fully capable of independent living upon entering, or may impose conditions based on certain pre-existing conditions. Residents typically enter a CCRC via its independent living units while in their 80s. However, some CCRCs allow residents to enter their assisted living units directly from the community.

There are various types of CCRCs. "Life care" communities accept full responsibility for the provision and payment of all housing and long term care services needed by a resident during his or her lifetime. The resident pays an entrance fee and a single monthly fee, regardless of how many services the resident is receiving or whether he or she is residing in an independent or assisted living unit or in the nursing facility.

In other cases, the CCRC may require the resident to share the cost of nursing facility care. For example, the CCRC may agree to pay for a specified number of days of nursing facility care at a scheduled daily rate. Some CCRCs guarantee residents access to its nursing facility but require them to pay the full cost of that care on a fee-for-service- basis. Other CCRCs require residents to purchase a long term care insurance policy to cover the cost of nursing facility care if it is needed. A list of companies authorized to sell such policies in Massachusetts and other consumer information about long term care insurance is available from the state Division of Insurance at (617) 521-7777.

Services

CCRCs offer a wide range of services and amenities, including one or more meals served in a common dining room, grounds and building maintenance, housekeeping, linen services, utilities (except telephone and cable television), security, scheduled transportation, and social and recreational activities.

Services available at extra charge may include the use of guest accommodations, personal laundry services, extra or guest meals, and additional housekeeping services. Health-related services may include a 24-hour emergency call system, health and wellness programs and home health services. CCRCs also provide assisted living services (either in separate assisted living units or to individuals residing in the independent living units) and 24-hour nursing facility care.

Most independent living units in a CCRC consist of one or two bedrooms and a living room, kitchen and full bathroom.

Oversight

Under state consumer protection laws, CCRCs are required to provide a disclosure statement to all prospective residents with information on the ownership and financial condition of the CCRC, including assurances that the CCRC can fulfill its contract obligations. Residential contracts should clearly state the general and health care-related services that are included and what services are available at an additional charge. The contract should also specify how and what percentage of the entrance fee is refunded if a resident moves or dies.

Paying for Continuing Care Retirement Housing

CCRCs often require a substantial entrance fee, ranging from less than $100,000 to more than $300,000. Most CCRCs residents finance this entrance fee through the sale of a house. Most CCRCs refund 90% of the initial deposit upon termination of the contract. Massachusetts law requires that the entrance fee minus no more than 1% for each month of occupancy must be refunded if a resident moves or dies.

In addition to the entrance fee, CCRCs charge a monthly fee ranging from $700 to more than $3,000 a month, depending on the specific terms and services outlined in the contract. Additional entrance and monthly fees are also required for a spouse. Although some nursing and other health care costs may be covered by Medicare, there are generally no public sources of financing available to CCRC residents.

The Volpes had four children, "the most wonderful children ever born," Ollie said. Their names were Carol, Marylou, and twins Richard and Dorothy.

"My family gave me a baby shower. I didn't know I was having twins. I found out after the shower. Someone called up all the guests and asked them to bring another gift. I was so embarrassed," Dorothy said.

Ollie and Dorothy have shared life's greatest joys together bringing up their children, and they have shared life's greatest sadness together in the death of their oldest child Carol at 31, after suffering through a long illness.

Ollie and Dorothy have spent the last 50 years in Braintree, the first half in a home on Fairfield Street now owned by their son Richard, and the second half in their lovely home on Holmes Street decorated by their daughter Dorothy and beside their daughter Marylou and her family.

"We have great meals on wheels right next door," Ollie said.

"When Marylou was 19, she was Miss Massachusetts. She was crowned by Gov. John Volpe. Everybody thought she was his relative, but she wasn't," Ollie said.

Ollie and Dorothy are an integral part in the lives of their three children, eight grandchildren, and six great grand-children.

The focus of their house, when the children aren't around, is their beautifully groomed black poodle Petey.

"His hairdo costs as much as a woman's," Ollie said.

What is their secret to a happy marriage?

"You have to make a happy house. You have to be happy with your children. Life must revolve around them," Dorothy said.

"I couldn't imagine life without our children, our grandchildren, and our great grandkids. Especially now," Ollie said. "They bring us such joy."

"I had to learn some of his ways, and he had to learn some of mine," Dorothy said. "The key is laughter. You are much healthier when you laugh. I feel like a million dollars after I have a good laugh."

"It's all worked out fine," Ollie said. "We have assisted living. She does the living and I do the assisting."

average, more than twice as much for the drugs as the drug companies' favored customers."

Delahunt referred to this as price discrimination that victimizes those who are least able to afford it. "Older Americans are having an increasingly difficult time affording prescription drugs. By one estimate, more than one in eight older Americans has been forced to choose between buying food and buying medicine," he said.

Although there are not many beacons of hope in the fight to bring down the prices of drugs, the Prescription Advantage program, administered by the Massachusetts Executive Office of Elder Affairs, has been a gift to many seniors.

"It has saved a lot of people," said Terry Whittemore of the Marshfield council on aging.

The program makes it possible for those 65 or older, in lower income brackets, to obtain prescriptions that they might not otherwise be able to afford.

"Massachusetts is at least trying to do something and has done something. The more people are aware that these things are out there the less people will fall through the cracks."

Maureen Kane of South Shore Elder Services said the program is vital for many who live merely on pensions and social security. "There is an entire group of people out there who desperately need this. They're in a tight squeeze but are very appreciative of the program."

"By one estimate, more than one in eight older Americans has been forced to choose between buying food and buying medicine."

U.S. Rep. William Delahunt, D-Quincy

Despite programs that offer a modicum of assistance they are not coming anywhere close to solving the larger problem. Officials believe the problem is going to get worse before it gets better and those who work with the elderly are frustrated at being, to a large degree, unable to help.

Abington's MacNeill has survived cancer and a stroke, yet when it comes to the affordability of prescription drugs she sees no light at the end of the tunnel.

weekends are lonely for a lot of seniors," said Joan Wright, director of the Scituate Council on Aging.

Language teacher George Haddad's students put on an evening dinner for senior citizens, complete with entertainment as well.

"Some kids are in both groups," noted Wright. "The nice thing is that the activities are driven by the students themselves. I'm thrilled. High school kids are wonderful, and I'm glad they are open to having a relationship with the senior center."

The "Senior Escort" program was established a year ago by the Scituate Council on Aging, which matches up high school students with senior citizens as part of a community service graduation requirement.

"Students accompany elders needing assistance going to the library or food shopping or just provide companionship through a cup of coffee and a chat," Wright said. "Both the kids and senior citizens love the program."

This year, younger people have joined in the fun.

This summer, for example, a couple of middle-schoolers called out numbers for "Bingo" games at the senior center.

"One of the girls who loves to do it and can't during the school year found it fit in perfectly with her summer schedule," Wright said.

Youthful interaction with senior citizens is widely encouraged in all three towns.

"We have them work on the grounds at the senior center to make the place look a little nicer, "Wright said. "I've been amazed at how willing kids are to come down and see what they can do to help out. It shows they have a healthy respect for and interest in the senior population."

Some want new police HQ held up

Voters to decide Monday at STM

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The proposed new police station is facing an uphill battle.

The advisory committee and capital budget committee dealt the project a one-two punch Tuesday when both committees unanimously decided not to back it even though selectmen had earlier done so by a majority vote.

But voters at the special Town Meeting on Monday will have the final say.

Officials told selectmen other capital improvement projects had eaten up the current budget, squeezing out the station. However, that explanation didn't satisfy proponents who say a new police station is a necessity.

"The current police station is a 40-year-old structure. We have town employees working in the basement," said George McGoldrick of the Police/Fire Study Committee.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said police face a situation that's practically unworkable: "We have confiscated weapons in closets and ammunition in holding cells; our detectives have no place to work."

Something to cheer about

Cheerleaders want program to grow

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

"It takes discipline, strength, and teamwork to compete in cheerleading just as in any sport."
— cheerleading coach Kara Profulis

This isn't your parents' cheerleading squad.

Rah, rah, sis cum bah, has been replaced with jumps, flips, and hurdles.

Gymnastics is the driving force behind today's cheerleading and senior co-captains at Cohasset High School, Jenn Kurtz and Kate Hines, are trying to garner excitement for the sport.

"It's a lot of fun. We have a blast out here," Jenn said.

The cheerleading program at CHS has been on and off for more than 20 years and the teens say they have had a hard time getting enough girls to field a team. While they'd like to cheer for both football and basketball, fielding a team for both seasons has proved difficult.

In the winter, the club is able to have 16 girls participating in the program, which is how many uniforms they have; however in the fall, the program has to compete with a variety of girl's sports that take potential participants away from cheerleading.

To add to the difficulty, there is no gym space for the program and the teens are forced to practice in the gym lobby of the school or at the community center. Athletic Director Ron Ford regrets the lack of space but says he is trying to secure an area at the Deer Hill School where the girls could practice this year.

"It would be a nice incentive to get girls out for cheerleading if the school gave them a place to practice," said Ruthann Ardizzoni, the girls' gymnastics coach.

Kate wishes that the cheerleaders would receive more attention from the school. "I wish they would take us more seriously. If you look at

Ice cream shop is up for grabs

Fast food facility may be an option

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

First it was Bergson's, then Newport Creamery — and now the future of the 3,500-square-foot building at the entrance to Shaw's plaza on Route 3A is anybody's guess.

But the odds are the site will remain a restaurant or be sold to a bank or retail business because of restrictions in the land lease, according to Paul Durgin, vice president of Jack Conway Commercial Real Estate, which is handling the property.

"We'll be marketing it to a restaurant or any type of retail," he said. Durgin said banks are also showing interest. However, any potential retail use could not compete with existing retailers in the plaza.

According to building commissioner Bob Egan, opening a fast-food facility at the site could be one of the options. He said the property owner, the Bank of Rhode Island, has inquired about how to obtain a special permit for a fast-food restaurant. The Zoning Board of Appeals

Special Town Meeting Monday

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

It's that time of the year when residents can make a difference. Special Town Meeting is only days away.

"It's the best form of democracy there is. Just by being 18 and registered to vote affords one the opportunity to shape our community for years to come," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Town Moderator George Marlette thinks that Town Meeting is a wonderful form of government. "This is a tremendous institution where people can make a difference," he said.

As it stands now, the warrant contains 25 articles but 22 will likely be voted on at special Town Meeting, the Planning Board last week continued its public hearing on three zoning articles without voting on them, effectively tabling them until the annual Town Meeting this spring.

But the potential loss of ledge, senior housing and building restrictions doesn't mean the special Town Meeting that gets underway at 7 p.m. Monday in the Sullivan gymnasium at the middle-high school will be a yawn. Anything but.

Redistricting could award Norwell to Sen. Hedlund

Republicans see addition as a plus

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Christmas season traditionally starts after Thanksgiving, but state Sen. Robert Hedlund could be celebrating early this year.

If current senatorial redistricting plans pass muster at the Statehouse – the 40-year-old Weymouth Republican will pick up the entire town of Norwell as part of the Plymouth-Norfolk district which he has represented for the better part of a decade.

In exchange for Norwell – Hedlund will lose the part of Braintree that he represents. He has shared Braintree with Quincy Democrat, Sen. Michael W. Morrissey since 1994, the last time redistricting took place. In addition to three Braintree precincts, Hedlund represents Weymouth, Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield and Duxbury.

What makes Norwell attractive is its good-sized army of registered Republicans. The town of 10,000 has 6,674 registered voters including 1,488 Republicans as opposed to the total of 658 Republicans in the three Braintree precincts.

But despite its heavily democratic electorate, Hedlund, who grew up in Hingham, says he'll miss East Braintree.

"Politically, it helps me," he said about his district acquiring Norwell. "But I've gotten to know some great people in East Braintree and in the last election, I carried a precinct over there because of their fierce opposition to the train." Hedlund is opposed to restoration of the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad project that would traverse Braintree, Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate.

State Republican Party committee woman Polly Logan of Cohasset said the redistricting plans are great news for the GOP of the South Shore.

"We've never done well in Braintree. Norwell's a great town and would be an asset to Hedlund."
— Polly Logan, Nicols Road

"We've never done well in Braintree," she said about Republican efforts. "Norwell's a great town and would be an asset to Hedlund." Logan said Norwell was part of the district when William Weeks of Cohasset served as senator.

The lion's share of Norwell's registered voters are unenrolled – meaning they don't belong to any political party and represent a swing vote that could lean more Republican.

Weeks, who served from 1965-1971 when the district encompassed some 19 communities, said Norwell was heavily Republican back then.

"While over the years many Republicans have become independents with a corresponding increase in Democrats as well, I still think the addition of Norwell to Senator Hedlund's district would be a plus for him," he said. "I think it would probably increase his Republican base over what it is currently."

Norwell Town Clerk Janice Lawson said unenrolled voting patterns are unpredictable. In the presidential primary of March 2000 — that featured democrats Vice President Al Gore vs. Sen. Bill Bradley and Republicans Gov. George W. Bush vs. Sen. John McCain — 1626 unenrolled Norwell voters pulled Republican ballots and 946 voted Democratic. But the September 2000 state primary, 147 unenrolled voted Republican and 331 voted Democratic. That primary did not feature a governor's race and Democrat US Senator Edward Kennedy and US Rep. William Delahunt were unopposed for their party's nomination as were Republican candidates Jack E. Robinson for US Senate and Eric Bleicken for US Congress.

Hedlund says the addition of Norwell makes running for a sixth term more attractive.

Schools to buy van

The Cohasset School Department is in urgent need a new van to transport school lunches prepared at the middle-high school to the two elementary schools.

"Our old van is very old and in a state of disrepair," said Supt. Edward Malvey. Replacing the van couldn't wait until the new budget in fiscal year 2003, which begins July 1.

The school department will spend $24,000 for the van.

Last spring, the town had appropriated $10.1 million for the school department with the expectation that the school district would be coming back to ask for another $100,000 at the special Town Meeting in the fall. The money for the van will come out of that $100,000, officials said.

Runway money

Selectmen, who are worried about the language of the lawsuit designed to halt construction of the new Logan runway, have decided to seek a separate $30,000 appropriation at Town Meeting on Monday to help fund the suit, rather than including it in the legal budget.

"The problem is that the appropriation for the runway lawsuit is included with the legal budget, said Selectman Merle Brown. "If we don't want to support the lawsuit, we need to be able to separate it from the other issues."

Many of the selectmen felt that something needed to be done to stop the runway, but weren't sure if this lawsuit was the best approach to take. "I'd like to pursue some action but I find the tone of the lawsuit awfully offensive. To start accusing public officials of fraud is not the kind of lawsuit I'd like to see us involved with," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris.

Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset joined forces last spring and appropriated $30,000 each to have a lawyer review the environmental feasibility study on the runway. Now the towns are each being asked for an additional $30,000 to pay legal costs in the runway battle. The lawsuit accuses Massport of intentionally submitting false reports in order to get the runway approved.

The new runway, dubbed 14/32, would significantly affect Hull, Hingham and Cohasset. The runway, if it becomes a reality, is expected to direct 75,000 more flights annually over Boston Harbor, which would affect area towns, according to Hingham jet noise task force members.

Town Meeting voters will be asked to consider the $30,000 appropriation on Monday.

Sunday liquor sales to start

Cohasset will allow liquor stores to open on Sundays from Nov. 25 to Dec. 30. The stores will be open from 12 p.m. to 9 p.m.. This has been common practice in the state for at least the last eight years.

Village plans OK'd

Selectmen got their final look at the village revitalization plans and reiterated their endorsement for the project last night. Dean Rizzo, the executive director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private corporation working with the village revitalization task force, outlined the project's overall goals. Rizzo said he has sent a mailing out to Cohasset residents asking them to support the plan by approving Article 15 at Monday's special Town Meeting. Rizzo will give a presentation of the design concepts at the special Town Meeting, and hopes he will sway voters to approve them.

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed says he thinks the plans will be approved without much debate. "These plans have been out there for a while and there's been plenty of meetings for their improvement, I hope the town approves the motion," Koed said.

Senior year OK

The school committee recently voted to allow a student to continue her senior year at the high school even though she no longer lives in town. School department policy allows students, who are no longer residents, to complete their senior year.

Gulf Association meeting Nov. 6

The Gulf Association will hold its annual meeting on Tuesday, Nov. 6 at 7:30 p.m. at the Lightkeeper's House off of Border Street in Cohasset Harbor. The Gulf Association is an active environmental organization whose expressed purpose is to preserve and protect the Gulf watershed. In addition to the business of electing officers for the coming year and conducting an open meeting, the agenda will include a featured presentation by Jason D. Burtner, South Shore Regional Coordinator for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Office of Coastal Zone Management. The Gulf Association proposes to initiate a comprehensive Natural Resource Inventory of the Gulf and its tributaries in conjunction with the Office of Coastal Zone Management as a way to identify and target watershed issues for the region. The meeting will focus on a discussion of the value of such an endeavor with proposals on how it might proceed. Anyone interested in this issue and/or the Gulf Association is encouraged to attend. Refreshments will be served.

Gold Star Mothers memorial dedication

Cohasset Veterans Memorial Committee will dedicate the town's new Gold Star Memorial to the mothers of servicemen who lost their lives during the 20th century.

The ceremony, planned for Sunday, Nov. 11 at 1 p.m. at Woodside Cemetery on North Main Street, will begin with a parade of local veterans marching into the newly reconstructed cemetery. Capt. Jane McCarthy USPHS, a Vietnam veteran, will deliver the dedication speech, following the parade. Representatives of the four wars will honor the mothers of the men who gave their lives for their country by placing roses on the memorial.

The Cohasset Veterans Memorial Committee was created to develop memorials to remember the Cohasset servicemen who gave their lives for their country. The town has 22 memorial squares and a Veterans Park on Cohasset Harbor.

Ledge preservation issue may have to wait until spring

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Planning Board never knew it was so popular.

Thirty minutes into last Wednesday's public hearing, it was clear there would be more space needed to satisfy the standing-room only crowd on hand to hear the board's take on the ledge-protection article on the special Town Meeting warrant.

Citizens were herded from the Planning Board meeting room to the selectmen's office where they clamored for chairs with the unlucky ones having to take a place on the floor.

The hearing was supposed to provide time to air the ledge article and two other zoning issues relating to senior housing and limiting new housing starts before Monday's special Town Meeting, with the Planning Board voting whether to recommend the warrant articles.

It never happened.

As soon as the hearing got underway, Planning Board member Bill Good proposed a motion, which carried 3-2, to continue the hearing on the articles until Nov. 7, two days after the special Town Meeting. This essentially tabled any voter action on all three articles until springtime, causing a huge outcry from many who were expecting the issues to be resolved this Monday.

But Wednesday morning, Cohasset Town Counsel gave proponents of the ledge article some hope the matter could be resolved this month. He said they could make a motion on the floor of special Town Meeting to continue the meeting to a later date. This would allow time for the Planning Board to conduct its hearing on Nov. 7, and then bring a recommendation to the continuance of special Town Meeting, which would probably fall on Nov. 14.

While all three articles that were before the Planning Board last week are important, most people at the meeting were concerned with Article 17, which seeks to prohibit the destruction or alteration of ledge over eight feet high.

Granite outcroppings of ledge are part of what gives Cohasset its unique character. Beach Street neighbors, who say they are heading a town-wide effort asking for a change in the zoning bylaws, lead the Great Neck Ledge Preservation Group. They want the town to require a variance be obtained before ledge eight-feet in height or more can be altered in any way. Noted for its spectacular ledge, the Beach Street area behind Town Hall has been eyed by developers for years. Current fears include a developer's plans for multiple dwellings that, under state law, could bypass local zoning with the promise of providing affordable housing.

The second article would limit the number of new homes in town until the Master Plan is developed. Town Planner Liz Harrington took an average of building permits issued for new housing starts over the past five years to come up with the proposal to limit them to 20 through 2003. From 1996-2000, building permits for new houses have averaged 19.6 per year.

The third article before the Planning Board would facilitate development of affordable housing for senior citizens, many of whom are being priced out of town as property taxes rise.

Many citizens expected to be able to vote on these articles at special Town Meeting but now they may have to wait.

"By the time we come to annual Town Meeting these articles will have been thoroughly researched and reworked. Then they will be ready for prime-time."

— Al Moore, Planning Board

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore said putting off the articles until the annual Town Meeting makes sense.

"By the time we come to annual Town Meeting these articles will have been thoroughly researched and reworked. Then they will be ready for prime-time," Moore said.

But the Beach Street neighbors in attendance were visibly upset.

"I am extremely disappointed in this motion," said Mark DeGiacomo, 59 Beach St. "This is a gross abuse of power on the planning board's part. To do this to the citizens is just wrong."

Moore said the neighbors have a hidden agenda.

"There's a very small group of people who are pushing this," he said. "It's very dangerous to change zoning laws that will affect the whole town."

But DeGiacomo said protecting ledge has broad appeal.

"This is an issue not confined to Beach Street, this affects all the residents of Cohasset who would like to see the ledge preserved," he said.

Selectman Tom Callahan said the Planning Board overstepped its bounds by continuing the hearing.

"You are doing a disservice to all Cohasset residents," he said. "You have to remember your role is as an advisory committee not as gatekeepers."

Some even accused the Planning Board of conspiring to approve the motion before the meeting — a clear violation of the Open Meeting Law.

"I heard that certain members may have met and made decisions," said Robin Lawrence, 15 Beach St. "If this is true the board has betrayed Cohasset citizens." He said the ledge preservation group would pursue filing a complaint with the District Attorney's office over the potential violation.

"That's a lot of malarkey, no one conspired beforehand, and no one is trying to abuse anyone," Moore said.

The ledge group still hopes the article will be tackled on Monday. The neighbors are talking to Town Counsel about the possibility of the articles being heard at special Town Meeting regardless of the Planning Board's action. The Planning Board discussed the ledge issue after it voted to continue the hearing. Some, who were in attendance, think the planning board also voted on the articles when member Peter Pratt asked the board to consider a vote. But Moore says Pratt's motion was voted down and there was no subsequent vote whether to recommend the articles.

By law, the planning board must hold a public hearing on any zoning article before it goes to Town Meeting.

Planning Board members in favor of the continuance were concerned that these articles had been slipped into the warrant at the last minute. They felt the issues needed to be worked over and reworded before the articles were brought before Town Meeting.

Board member Bob Sturdy said, "There's not enough time to debate these articles. Some articles are debated for well over a year. We are not running a Mickey Mouse operation here."

David Walsh, a Boston developer who owns property behind Beach Street agreed with Sturdy. "These articles have been snuck into the warrant at the last minute by disgruntled citizens who don't want anything built by their house," Walsh said.

Moore, Sturdy and Good voted for the continuance with members Pratt and Chris Ford dissenting. Pratt said he felt that it was not up to the planning board to make decisions about the life or death of an article but, "the overall legislative body is the citizens and they should be given the option to vote on the article."

Special Town Meeting is on Monday on the minds of residents for some time and include construction of the new library and police station, and village revitalization — promise to keep the venerable form of open democracy lively.

Marlette said he hopes to adjourn the meeting around 11 p.m. If the meeting were to run over and necessitated a second day of debate, Haddad said it would probably be held the following day.

While the village revitalization effort is not asking for any money, the library and the police station are. Advisory Committee chairman Maureen Jerz said money is always a controversial issue at Town Meeting. With the state that the economy is currently in, and the unstable future it faces, Jerz feels that the community may be more reluctant to set aside money than it has in the past.

"Any article involving an appropriation of a large sum of money generates a lot of debate," she said. "People have to consider both the short-term and long-term effects of appropriating money."

The library is asking special Town Meeting to borrow $600,000 toward the building of a new library and allow construction to begin on the library without the state grant in hand. Originally, construction was not supposed to begin until the grant was awarded. Cohasset is first on the waiting list for the $1.5 million grant and library trustee chairman Patience Towle said in an earlier interview that being first on the waiting list "means we are going to get that money".

The current tax levy will support the request for the additional $600,000. Approximately $60,000 will be used to pay back the loan in the first year with the total amount to be paid back over 20 years, Haddad said.

With the town anxious to see construction begun on the library at the old Osgood School, Haddad said if the special Town Meeting awards the money he would appoint a contractor the next day. Construction is expected to take 10 to 14 months.

Another issue sure to generate concerns is the new police station.

The article on the warrant asks the town to appropriate money, "for the purpose of retaining architects, engineers or other professional services to develop construction drawings and bid documents to construct a new Police Station."

The Police/Fire Station Study Committee has recommended separating the two public safety headquarters and proposes constructing a new 11,000-square-foot, police station on donated land off Route 3A near Sunrise Assisted Living.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said the department needs more space. He said that when constructed, the current police station originally housed 10 full-time patrol officers, plus the chief. Now, it houses 18 full-time officers, a chief, five civilian dispatchers, a secretary, an animal control officer, and two seasonal police officers.

Noonan said the two detectives share a 5 ft. by 10 ft. equipment room that also houses equipment for the 911 system; the four sergeants, prosecutor, and secretary share a 10 ft. by 12 ft. room, and the safety officer and school resource officer share a room in the cellar.

The new police station headquarters would be one floor, and could provide up to 15,000 square feet of space for the department. It would include a secured area for dispatchers, as well as separate space for the different officers and detectives, meeting rooms, and eating area, an exercise space and separate locker rooms for men and women. It would also have a separately secured area containing a search room, booking room, four cells for male prisoners, one each for juvenile and female prisoners, and a holding tank for mass arrests.

Noonan if the article is approved he will go back and ask the town for money for the construction at annual Town Meeting in March.

Potentially saving the town a lot of money is Paul Barry's offer of two acres of land for the new station off of Route 3A. Special Town Meeting is going to be asked to approve the gift. Barry, who is involved with a number of outstanding litigation matters with the town regarding his Cohasset Heights Ltd. landfill and is looking to open a new transfer facility off Crocker Lane, didn't ask for any special considerations when he made the offer.

The concept of village infrastructure and streetscape improvements is also before the voters. The Village Revitalization Task Force has been working in conjunction with the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private non-profit group. Plans include reconstructing the sidewalks throughout the village and redesigning the Ripley Road/Pleasant Street intersection.

In a letter to the editor the VRTF members wished to remind residents that "Town Meeting is not being asked to endorse specific design elements...Article 15 does not ask for any Town funding for this project."

If the town chooses to approve this article it would allow the VRTF to begin "creating final design and construction drawings." Later, specific designs will be decided upon at public hearings.

The task force has presented a preliminary cost estimate of the improvements. The estimated costs, not including money for contingencies and full-design plans, ranged from $1.7 million with concrete sidewalks to $2.4 million with brick. There would be no cost of taxpayers. A combination of the $1.5 million Public Works Economic Development grant for the downtown area, the MBTA-funded reconstruction of the parking lot, the existing $170,000 MassHighway grant for the St. Stephen's walkway, and private donations could cover the entire cost of the project.

Other issues before special Town Meeting include:

- Water system improvements
- Renaming the Hagerty Property, Mariners Park
- 4 percent room occupancy tax
- Determining the makeup of the Community Preservation Committee
- Flood control improvements
- Paying for a Master Plan
- Forest Avenue sidewalk
- Sewer abatement for the historical society museums on Elm Street

Cohasset woman at helm of new light beer company

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Rhonda Kallman of Sheldon Road thinks her company's new light beer will be a hit.

For anyone still stuck in the Dark Ages when it comes to beer — Cohasset's Rhonda Kallman won't fit the stereotype of those that love to imbibe the amber-colored liquid.

For one thing Kallman is female and slim – the perfect spokeswoman for the less caloric cousin to traditional brews, light beer. Kallman, who lives on Sheldon Road with her husband and three young children, is also no stranger to the highly competitive, beer business.

Some 15 years ago, her career began as an executive secretary with Boston Consulting Group while working as a bartender and waitress at nights. Her former boss, Jim Koch, left BCG to start the Boston Beer Company and needed help with promotions, distribution and sales. He called on Kallman with her knowledge of the bar scene to help. Together, they turned Sam Adams into a nationally recognized brand.

Kallman left the Boston Beer Company nearly two years ago, and not long thereafter launched the Hingham-based New Century Brewing Company. The company's light beer, Edison – created by industry veteran Joseph Owades who is credited with inventing the beer that became Miller Lite – was rolled out last month.

To create the beer Kallman asked Owades, who is sometimes referred to as "the father of light beer," to re-invent the process of brewing light beer. It took him 17 months but Kallman believes Owades outdid himself.

"To my knowledge New Century Brewing is the first independent company to go after the light beer segment exclusively," she said. "We're not borrowing interest from an existing flagship beer – we built Edison from the ground up to be our flagship, with a smooth flavor and light taste not found in other light beers."

Kallman says the price – six packs will sell for about $6 [slightly above domestic light beers and less then imports] – will help make Edison, a 109-calorie beer, very competitive.

"Consumers want more choices," she says. "Edison gives beer drinker a way to trade up in quality without having to pay expensive import prices."

"Being a female, it's unusual to be an executive in this industry, but I just love it."
— Rhonda Kallman, Sheldon Road

Light beer represents 44 percent of U.S. beer consumption and Kallman estimates that number will grow to 50 percent by 2003. Edison hopes to stake its claim in a market dominated by the big three, Budweiser, Miller and Coors.

But Kallman says the task may not be as tough as it appears because times have changed.

When she worked with the Boston Beer Company, she had to educate people about "craft beer" and "micro brews." Today Kallman is excited about entering a market in which people know what they want. "We just need to get the beer in the drinker's hands," she said. To that end, over the next few weeks Edison promoters will make the rounds to Boston-area bars.

Brewed by Matt's Brewing Company in Utica NY, Edison is not trying to please full-bodied beer drinkers.

"Light-beer drinkers don't want a lot of flavor or body, they really just want something easy to drink," Kallman said.

The name of the beer is a tribute to another inventor, Thomas Edison. Kallman said the beer is about light and energy and she wanted a name with history and roots.

But as far as those old-world beer stereotypes go – Kallman is changing the history books.

"Being a female, it's unusual to be an executive in this industry, but I just love it," Kallman said. She added that the industry if filled with incredibly social and outgoing people that make coming to work a pleasure.

Kallman is married to Matt Shanley and they have three children, Courtney who is five months old, Alexander who is three, and Callie, who is five.

OPINION

On the front lines

Most residents in nearby Hingham probably cursed the post office under their breath when they checked their mailboxes on Saturday to find nothing there. Others likely walked away thinking they just didn't get any mail — and felt a little relieved that even the junk mail appeared to take a holiday, in addition to any bills and other correspondence.

But what was going on in downtown Hingham at the North Street post office was anything but routine. When a postal worker tried to clear a mail jam in a sorting machine, a powdery substance burst forth irritating her face and eyes. Following post office protocol, the authorities were called in, the post office closed and the suspicious substance and those who came in contact with it tested for the deadly bacteria anthrax.

Christine Dougas, spokeswoman for the post office, says there have been no less than 1,000 false alarms involving anthrax in New England post offices since the terrorist attack on America Sept. 11. Luckily, just like the other New England incidents, Hingham's turned out to be only a scare.

But anyone who's following the news knows that anthrax has been delivered via the mail to places such as Tom Brokaw's office in New York City. So in addition to potential recipients — postal workers are also at risk for exposure.

Yet, despite exposures to US Post Office employees in New Jersey and Washington, D.C. — the mail continues to arrive.

As Dougas says, "They don't say through snow and rain for nothing..."

Many postal workers are veterans and can recall facing the enemy in faraway places such as Vietnam.

"When you're in war, you can't dwell on things," Dougas says. "You have to keep doing your job. Postal workers see this as their part, their way of setting an example for the rest of the country."

Most of us pay upwards of $1 for a cup of coffee and think nothing of it. Yet, we complain about paying 34 cents to mail a letter that no doubt passes through dozens, if not hundreds, of hands and several machines before reaching its destination.

Few realize that when Hingham's mail was stopped in its tracks Saturday, postal workers volunteered to come in on Sunday to get mail ready for Monday.

"I think our employees deserve a pat on the back and they don't always get it," Dougas says. "Like all government agencies — people love to hate us."

Yet as she points out, no postal worker imagined when he or she applied for the job that it would mean fighting on the front lines of a terrorist war.

"This is a scary time," she says. "But the postal workers have a fierce determination. They are not going to be defeated by terrorism; their morale is admirable."

As citizens, we're starting to appreciate the bills and junk mail along with the cards and letters we receive. The US mail is a wonderful thing — too precious to lose, and although threatened, not in danger due to the bravery of our postal workers and their dedication to the job at hand.

The mail is critical to our economy and the very fabric of our society – whether it be letters to grandparents or mortgage payments.

It's time we give the post office and our local clerks and carriers the pat on the back they deserve.

We need to say, "We're proud of you and thank you."

Don't sell water

Town of Cohasset
Board of Water Commissioners

We are concerned about the possible sale of "our" water to this private, greedy corporation.

They provide us in No. Cohasset with the "third highest" water rate in the country.

"American" is now owned by a British conglomerate. Since new ownership our benefit of a special "users" stock plan has been eliminated.

Hopefully Cohasset would not sell water to be resold to us at a much higher rate.

Can we and our neighbor's be placed on the Cohasset water?

SPED parents have concerns

TO THE EDITOR:

Regarding last week's article headlined, "Parent wants to hold schools accountable," the characterization of us as being on a "crusade" was not ours. That was a description used by the writer. Parents of children with Special Needs have enough issues to deal with without having to contend with school officials who refuse to follow the law. Embarking on a "crusade" is the last thing which any parent might wish to do.

As for our statement that we have "no tolerance for public officials who make mistakes," that quote must be understood in the context of a year's worth of frustration of dealing with the Cohasset school administration. Coming from backgrounds in public service ourselves, there is no one who is more understanding of the difficult issues facing our public servants in these days of increasing complexity and increasing demands on our public resources than are we.

But in the context of our experience with the Cohasset schools over the past year, our viewpoint is more appropriately stated this way: We have no tolerance for public officials who repeatedly violate the rules and regulations they are supposed to uphold; who refuse to acknowledge that they are violating the law; who seek to marginalize the role of parents in their child's education; and who then treat parents who inquire about their violations of the law with disdain and with dismissive comments such as, "We don't owe you any explanations" and "You aren't the experts - we're the experts on these regulations."

The School Committee has the legal responsibility for ensuring that those who work in our schools are following the laws. It is neither fair nor right that individual parents should bear the burden of bringing these issues to the attention of the Department of Education. But in the absence of School Department policies and procedures which ensure compliance with our Special Education laws, filing a complaint with the DOE was our only, and last, recourse.

Village work support urged

TO THE EDITOR:

As members of the Town's Village Revitalization Task Force (VRTF), we encourage Cohasset voters to approve Article 15 at Special Town Meeting, which asks the community to approve in concept, recommended infrastructure and streetscape improvements for the Village.

For the past four years, the VRTF has overseen the initiative to improve pedestrian and vehicle safety, circulation and accessibility; provide aesthetic enhancements; and establish a level of economic vitality for the downtown environment. In the past year, the VRTF worked closely with the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation in the development of professional design plans to achieve these goals. Numerous public workshops and meetings with town officials, committees, local organization, and members of the business community have been held to generate a community consensus on the desired improvements. The plans being presented at Town Meeting are a direct result of this public outreach.

It is important to note that Town Meeting is not being asked to endorse specific design elements, such as the type of sidewalk materials and the style of light fixtures. These critical design elements need further review and public input before a recommendation is made to the Board of Selectmen for approval. In addition, as a result of approximately $2.25 million in grants, and other funding commitments earmarked for these improvements, Article 15 does not ask for any town funding for this project at this time.

A "yes" vote will give the VRTF the endorsement to proceed with further analysis of the specific design elements, and begin the process of creating final design and construction drawings. The completion of the plans will help the town effectively coordinate and control the design and construction of additional projects planned for the Village, such as the possible restoration of the MBTA Greenbush Line and the final phase of the James Brook Flood Control Project. Efficient management and oversight will maximize the dollars spent in the Village and minimize the level of disruption for residents and businesses.

Vote "Yes on Article 15" and help the town take one more step closer to bringing long-overdue infrastructure and streetscape improvements to Cohasset Village.

Agnes McCann named top Democrat

By Susan Kent
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee has named Agnes McCann of Doane Street, as this year's Outstanding Democrat. This award is bestowed upon the individual whose life and works best represent the goals and fundamental beliefs of the Democratic Party.

Each of the members of "Co-Op 8", an association of Democratic town committees from Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Marshfield, Scituate and Weymouth has chosen an Outstanding Democrat to be honored at a dinner and silent auction, sponsored by the Marshfield Town Committee, to be held on Friday evening, Nov. 2 at the Radisson Hotel in Rockland.

Give a job to a busy person and watch it get done. Give a task to McCann and she will not only accomplish it, she will organize it and inspire others to join her. McCann is the person holding the signs, collecting canned goods, getting the signatures and working, at all times, to help others. As a busy mother, and, while maintaining an active career as a legal administrator for The Travelers Insurance, she still makes time for everyone.

McCann has spent her life in service to her home and her community. Quietly, and in her own way, McCann has always made a difference. She was an attorney in Boston before moving to Cohasset to raise her family. She has been a Library Trustee since 1984 and a member of the Democratic Town Committee for more than ten years. She is presently serving her second term as chairman.

As the mother of two sons, Sergei and André, McCann has always been involved with the Cohasset schools and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. She was a member of the Cohasset Education Foundation and began her association with the library as the story hour lady.

She was raised in Wayland and some of her fondest memories are the lively political discussions at her family's dinner table. Service to the community and dedication to the democratic process were not vague concepts to her family, but the foundations of a concerned and compassionate way of life. McCann wrote her first letter-to-the-editor at age nine and was never silent again.

McCann lives her life dedicated to the principal that an educated and informed society is a free society. We are all very proud of her. As a community, we are lucky that someone with McCann's empathy, enthusiasm, fairness and loving nature is interested in us all.

There are tickets still available for the Co-Op 8 Dinner on Nov. 2. For information, call Jean Christensen at 781-837-0665.

HEALTH NOTES

Food allergies can be frightening

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

About 75 people in Cohasset have a food allergy. This is the story of one such family. They learned about their allergy problem when their daughter was young and their doctor gave them a list of the necessary precautions. Summarized, they could not let their child even smell, much less touch anything that contained peanuts or peanut oil. They developed a life style that required constant vigilance, and as their daughter grew up, living with the condition, she achieved a relatively normal childhood.

Food allergies have been around for a long time and are one of the few problems we can't blame on pollution from our modern civilization.

At about eight she inadvertently ate some cookies which had peanut oil, but her parents were there, and she was given a shot of Epinephrine, and was saved from a severe reaction. Years later, since she was a good student, their daughter went to university, and in her junior year, one day, she went to the local Dunkin Donuts and, as had become her habit, she asked if the doughnut contained any peanut oil or peanuts. Upon being reassured, she took a bite, and instantly knew she was in trouble. She had forgotten her Epi-Pen, the personal syringe which everyone with peanut allergy should carry.

The university clinic was only two blocks away, and knew of her condition and knew what to do, so she decided it would be quicker to walk than to call an ambulance. By the time she reached the clinic, she was near death. The trace amounts of peanut oil left in the donut batter from a poorly cleaned batch mixer had entered her system and triggered a reaction which produced histamines in her body, closing nasal and breathing passages, lowering her blood pressure, tightening her chest, cutting off her air supply. As she collapsed outside the clinic, someone recognized her and gave her the all important dose of Epinepherin, and she recovered. For the parents, it was devastating, and for the girl, it signaled that she was in for a lifetime of everlasting vigilance.

Last week on Tuesday, Oct. 23, the Board of Health sponsored a workshop on food allergies at the Osgood School cafeteria. Fifteen people attended. Food allergies have been around for a long time and are one of the few problems we can't blame on pollution from our modern civilization, although, because of increasing centralization of our baked goods production, it is far more difficult to be able to identify foods with the common allergens.

Since food allergies affect only 1-2 percent of the general population, and only nine kids in the lower grades of our school system have it, the high attendance at the Board of Health event was a welcome surprise. Fortunately, we have concerned health care professionals in Cohasset who know how difficult it is for families afflicted with this problem and many of these showed up, together with some parents of afflicted kids.

Anaphylactic shock is trouble for the children who have it, and a constant worry for their parents. These parents must maintain a vigilance which is hard to understand for the rest of us. They must be constantly sensitive to the things their kids eat and come into contact with since even trace amounts of foods can cause a life threatening episode for their children. In some cases parents of other children in classes with those who have food allergies have come to resent the extra attention to seemingly meaningless details of care necessitated by these afflicted children. There are those who have resented always having an extra parent along on field trips when an allergy parent is present. If we all understood what these parents and their kids are going through, we would be more lenient with them. Even 50 years ago, these kids would not have survived to live full productive lives.

There seems to be interest by some in our community in forming a support group of parents with kids having food allergies. The Board would welcome such activity and would work to facilitate any such an initiative by concerned parents. Call Judy Fitzsimmons at 781 383-2210.

Flu vaccine

Finally, Flu Vaccine has arrived! The Board of Health has scheduled vaccine clinics. If you have questions, call Judy Fitzsimmons, 781 383-2210.

Come as a 'heartmind' to Town Meeting

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

I want to share with you a word I learned in a workshop with Joanna Macy. The word is heartmind. The western-scientific-rational-electronic culture that is the medium of a lot of our daily lives tells us to keep our thoughts and feelings separate: a judge instructing jurors to reach a verdict on the evidence alone, disregarding personal emotions; a scientist reporting just the data, devoid of human error and contamination. The underlying assumption and message is clear: your emotions are unreliable and untrustworthy. You have separate parts: your thoughts and your feelings.

"Heartmind" is based on a very different assumption and message: You don't have parts. You are whole. Your emotions are not separate from your thoughts. You are a heartmind. There are other ways of knowing than via the intellect. I'd like you to experiment with this word. Say to yourself, "I am a heartmind." When events require a response from you, ask yourself, "How do I respond as a heartmind?"

I'd like you to do two exercises in the next week, both working with the heartmind idea.

Exercise 1: Being With Rock Ledge

Find an opportunity to go off by yourself to be with some beautiful rock ledge. Go alone. Don't take any kids or animals or friends. Don't take a Walkman or anything to read. Pick a sunny day if you can. Cohasset is never more beautiful than these crisp autumn days with the leaves ablaze in glorious colors. If you have a favorite rock ledge place, one to which you feel drawn, go there. If you don't know of any, here are a few to try.

• Walk through Great Brewster Woods, located behind Town Hall, taking the path northward until you find the huge ledge outcropping at the saltmarsh overlook. It's magnificent.

• Moors Rocks are on the ocean side of Jerusalem Road just east of Deep Run. Climb down the ocean face until you can't see the road any more, just rock, sea, and sky.

• Sandy Beach has wonderful rock ledge at both ends. Go at low tide so you can explore the nooks and crannies at the south end. If it's sunny, try the north end, snuggled against the vertical rock wall, sheltered from the wind but fully exposed to the sun's warmth.

• Whitney-Thayer Woods and Wompatuck State Park have numerous "balancing rocks" and high walls of mossy granite in hemlock groves. Along the reservoir are places where the rock continues down under the water, or towers high above it.

How do you "be with rock?" First get into a comfortable position on the rock. Sitting with legs folded Buddha-style is ideal, but you can stretch out, lie down, or find a natural seat. Touch the rock with the palms of both hands. Pay attention to how the rock feels, remembering you are a heartmind. Notice the color of the sky and the shape of passing clouds. Notice the birds, their flight and song. Then focus not on specific perceptions, but become aware of the whole process of nature you are seeing-feeling. Be still and remain there for at least ten minutes. It helps to use a timer, so you don't keep looking at your watch. You can build up to longer times; I prefer 40 minutes, but I've been doing this practice for several years..

Your mind will begin to wander, and you'll stop being aware of the rock and your surroundings. You need mental anchors to hold you in the present moment. Three anchors you can use are your breath, your body, and sounds. Count your inhalations from one to ten, paying attention to how the life-giving air feels as it moves through you to your lungs. Continue counting breaths from one to ten. Allow yourself to sense your body, your muscles, how the sun and wind feel on your skin. When you hear passing airplanes or cars, just think of those sounds as vibrations of air molecules, with no meaning. Even with anchors your mind will wander. Don't worry about it or get upset. Simply go back to counting breaths, sensing your body, hearing vibrations.

After some time passes you'll notice muscles relaxing. Your may notice your shoulders suddenly lowering, your facial muscles letting go, or your thighs dropping more fully onto the rock. You'll feel more grounded, more connected to the earth, to the rock you're on. Now is the time to pose a question: "In what ways would I like to be like this rock?" See what thoughts pop into your mind. Then go back to your anchors, and see what other thoughts come into your mind. You'll be able to distinguish between wandering thoughts and surprisingly new and fresh thoughts. Allow the spirit of the place, the genius loci, to provide your thoughts. You will now have more feeling-thoughts about rock ledge than you can ever possibly get by driving past some rock ledge, glancing over and seeing it as scenery. Leave when you feel ready.

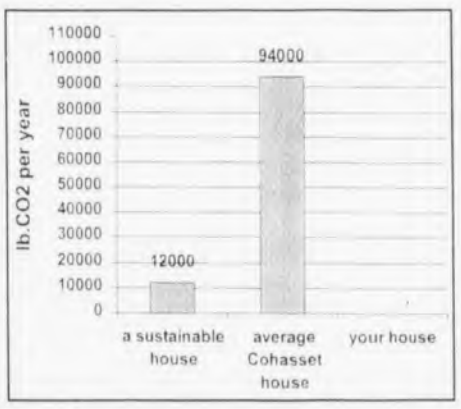
The final step of this exercise is to attend Town Meeting Monday, Nov. 5, 7 p.m.. Article 17 is a proposal to protect rock ledge in Cohasset. There are some shortcomings of the wording of Article 17, but the intent is abundantly clear. Vote your heartmind. Continue being with rock ledge regularly.

Exercise 2: Is it broke?

"If it ain't broke, don't fix it." Is your Cohasset house broke, or is everything just fine? Well, to all appearances it is probably just fine, because we can't detect most of the effects our houses are having on us and nature. So I'd like you to examine one aspect of your house: its annual carbon dioxide (CO_2) emissions.

There are four simple steps. Here's what you do:

1. Get out your last electric bill, and find the chart of Total KWH (kilowatt-hours) your household used in the previous 13 months. Omit the current month, and add up your electricity usage for the past year. Multiply by 1.5 The result is how many pounds of carbon dioxide your household caused last year, due to fossil fuels burned at the power plant that supplies your house.



The emissions of the sustainable house shown on the chart means that nature can absorb all the CO_2 this house produces, and it will have no effect on global climate change. It's not broke. The emissions of the average Cohasset house are almost 20 times as much. Nature cannot absorb that much CO_2, and this house is contributing to global climate change. Sorry, but it's broke. It needs to be fixed. How did your house score?

Now think about whether it makes sense to continue building houses like this in Cohasset. Or would it make sense to stop until homeowners and builders understand how to build sustainable houses? Hint: use your heartmind. Then go to Town Meeting and vote your heartmind on Article 22, Interim Growth Rate.

We are now in a time of transition and transformation, realizing the present way isn't working. We wish this weren't true, but in our hearts we know it is. We've never had to face problems like these. We don't have many answers to making our lifestyles sustainable. But I think it's similar to how you eat an elephant. One bite at a time. See you at Town Meeting.

Omit the current month, and add up your electricity usage for the past year. Multiply by 1.5. The result is how many pounds of carbon dioxide (CO_2) your household caused last year, due to fossil fuels burned at he power plant that supplies your house.

Example: 10,500 KWH X 1.5 = 15,750 lbs. of CO_2.

2. Get out your last heating bill, and add up your fuel usage for the last year. The multiplier depends on the type of fuel.

Example:	1600 therms natural gas	X 12.1 = 19,360 lbs. of CO_2
or	1200 gallons fuel oil	X 26.4 = 31,680 lbs. of CO_2
or	30,000 KWH electricity	X 1.5 = 45,000 lbs. of CO_2

3. Get out your IRS form 1040 and find how many miles you drove your household vehicles last year. Divide by the miles per gallon your vehicles get, and multiply by 20.

Example:
Land Rover	13,000 miles @ 12 miles per gallon	= 1,083 gallons
Honda	15,000 miles @ 25 miles per gallon	= 600 gallons
VW	12,000 miles @ 35 miles per gallon	= 343 gallons
		2,026 gallons X 20 = 40,520 lbs. of CO_2

4. Add up your three totals.

Example:	15,750 lbs. of CO_2 (electricity)
	31,680 lbs. of CO_2 (heating)
	40,520 lbs. of CO_2 (cars)
Total:	87,950 lbs. of CO_2 (total household)

To put your annual household CO_2 emissions into perspective, enter your total value in the chart below:

Amherst patriotism

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

What shall we do about Amherst, that little college town in the hills of central Massachusetts where we send our children to be educated by Billy Bulger and they come back spouting the philosophy of Karl Marx and, more recently, Osama bin Laden.

Just the other day, two students from Amherst College organized an Amherst Assembly for Patriotism — sounds contradictory in terms, doesn't it? — which was interrupted by a group of a dozen demonstrators who burned two flags and stood on a third while chanting, "This flag doesn't represent me."

"I was absolutely shocked," said Michael Flood, who with Benjamin Baum organized the assembly. "We were trying to create a unifying patriotic message and they destroyed it."

What does Amherst think it is? The People's Republic of Cambridge?

The flag-burning may have shocked Baum and Flood but to those of us who have grown familiar with Amherst over the years it was hardly unexpected.

Only a few days before, the selectmen of Amherst had voted to limit the town's display of the flag to patriotic holidays only and Amherst physics professor Jennie Traschen told the Board, "What the flag stands for is a symbol of terrorism and death and fear and destruction and repression."

Twelve hours later, two hijacked airliners were deliberately flown into the World Trade Center towers in New York, spreading a little imported terrorism, death, fear and destruction, if not repression, over the land.

Wasn't Amherst the town that debated changing its name a few years ago when someone discovered that its namesake, Lord Jeffrey Amherst, was mean to the Indians 250 years ago before they were Native Americans and became eligible to deal black jack to the white man on their reservations?

Wasn't Amherst the town where a high school production of the popular Broadway musical "West Side Story" was shut down even before it opened because of complaints that it was anti-Latino! And wasn't there a move afoot in Amherst a while back to take the Minuteman off the state flag because it was too warlike?

What does Amherst think it is? The People's Republic of Cambridge?

The last I heard from Cambridge, the City Council was voting to have the voting age reduced to 16 years and extend the right to vote to non-citizens provided they intend "in good faith to become a United States citizen" and intend "to begin the process, if eligible

But I digress . . .

The flag, of course, has its protectors. Almost yearly, the House of Representatives approves a Constitutional amendment allowing the federal government to penalize flag-burners and almost yearly the Senate shoots it down. "Wheeling out a howitzer to deal with a mosquito," said one senator.

A Constitutional amendment may not be needed. Ivan Warner, once a POW in Vietnam, recalled for the Washington Post a while back the time a North Vietnamese soldier showed him a picture of an American anti-war protester burning an American flag.

"There," said the soldier. "People in your own country protest your cause. That shows you are wrong."

"No," said Warner. "That proves I'm right. In my country, we are not afraid of freedom, even if it means that people disagree with us."

The soldier, Warner added, flew into a rage.

Making a difference

TO THE EDITOR:

On Saturday, Oct. 27, the Osgood PSO and School Council, the Deer Hill PSO and the Cohasset Soccer Club joined together on Make A Difference Day, a national day of volunteerism, to raise funds for the 9,000 New York City Public School students affected by the WTC tragedy. Through the sale of bake goods, student artwork and concession stand refreshments at Milliken Field throughout the day, we raised $2,076 for the Fund for Public Schools – WTC School Relief Fund. This fund was established by the Board of Education of the City of New York to assist with the costs of relocation and student counseling services.

We would like to thank Jody Golden, Diane Benson, Jill Zimmerman, Dawn Gideon-Murphy, Johanna Quinlan, Lori McCabe, Laura Murphy and Paula Pozniak — the Osgood PSO Special Events Committee — for organizing this event. Thank you also to all of the parents and children who baked goods and/or volunteered at the field on Saturday and to the Osgood and Deer Hill students who created the artwork sold. We also thank the following area merchants for their generous donations of food: Kinnealey Meats; the Village Butcher; Atlantic Bagel Co; Stop & Shop; Shaws; Dunkin' Donuts; and French Memories. The communal effort that went into this event is proof that "United We Stand – Together We Can Make A Difference."

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

AP scholars named

Twenty-four students at Cohasset High School have been named AP Scholars by the College Board in recognition of their exceptional achievement on the college-level Advanced Placement (AP) Examinations. Approximately 23 percent of America's graduating seniors have taken one or more AP exams. Only about 13 percent of the more than 840,000 students who took AP Examinations in May performed at a sufficiently high level to merit such recognition.

Students take AP Examinations in May after completing challenging college-level courses at their high school. The College Board recognizes several levels of achievement based on the number of year-long courses and exams (or their equivalent semester-long courses and exams). At Cohasset High School, eight students qualified for the AP Scholar with Distinction Award by earning an average grade of at least 3.5 on all AP Examinations, and grades of three or higher on five or more of these exams.

These AP Scholars with Distinction are: Benjamin Bixby, Casey Brewer, Daniel Duffy, Christopher Golden, Justin Langham, Douglas O'Brien, Erik Shea, and Ashley Ulmer.

Five students qualified for the AP Scholar with Honor Award by earning an average grade of at least. 3.25 on all AP Exams taken; and grades of three or higher on four or more of these exams.

These AP Scholars with Honor Award recipients are: Robin Cunningham, Lydia Guild, John Hertig, Elizabeth Ingber and Kathleen McCarthy.

Eleven students qualified for the AP Scholar Award by completing three or more AP Examinations, with a grade of three or higher.

The AP Scholars are: Timothy Bilodeau, Casey Brewer, Dan Duffy, Justin Langham, Kathleen McCarthy, Peter Minnar, Rebecca Moje, Douglas O'Brien, Erik Shea and Caitlin Stansell.

Of this year's award winners, six are underclassmen: Charles Anderson, Matthew Bilodeau, Katharine Grimm, Dan Littauer, Robin Murphy and Corey Sullivan.

Most of the nation's colleges and universities award credit, advanced placement, or both based on successful performance on the AP exams. More than 1,400 institutions award a full year's credit (sophomore standing) to students presenting a sufficient number of qualifying grades. There are 35 AP Exams offered in 19 subject areas, each consisting of multiple-choice and free-response (essay or problem solving) questions except for the Studio Art exam which evaluates students' original artwork.

Cheerleaders want program to grow any other high school, their programs are awesome," she said.

While the cheerleaders do receive varsity letters, the school views them as a club. Cheerleading is not under the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association but the Massachusetts Secondary School Administrative Association, which means CMHS Principal Michael Jones is in charge of the club rather than the athletic director.

"I don't look at it as if we're a club. It takes discipline, strength, and teamwork to compete in cheerleading just as in any sport," said cheerleading coach Kara Protulis. She still follows all the regulations of the MIAA and said the difference between being a club rather than a sport is semantics. She added that cheerleading is much more athletic than it ever was in the past.

League rules mandate the cheerleading club not allowed to travel with the team. This league policy has been instituted because of the problems associated with cheering at another school. Ford said that the cheerleaders would be able to travel with the team if the team reaches the playoffs. Despite the restriction, Jenn and Kate say that cheerleading is a great option for girls entering high school.

"It's a great way for younger girls to meet some of the older girls in the high school and have a group of people they know," Jenn said. Currently, the program is recruiting seventh- and eighth-graders to cheer for next year.

Jenn and Kate are taking private gymnastic lessons three times a week in order to get prepared for the season, which begins the Monday after Thanksgiving. Ardizzoni has them work on strength, conditioning, and flexibility in an effort to expand their repertoire of moves.

Jenn has been involved with gymnastics for six years and Kate has been participating for four years. Both said it was through their families' enthusiasm for the sport that got them involved.

Some want new police HQ held up

Noonan added that the station was recently written up by the Board of Health because police had no room to store ammunition, and were forced to lock it up in empty holding cells.

"This is not a playground or library. This is a building for the people who protect us"

—Mark McGoldrick, Police/Fire Study Commission

Mark Baker, chairman of the Capital Budget Committee, said he realizes there is a need for a new police station, but doesn't think now is the time to pursue the project. "The committee felt with a new chief coming to town and the project already a couple of years away that we should put it aside for awhile," Baker said.

Advisory Committee chairman Maureen Jerz said her committee agreed with that assessment. "We do need a better building for the police but it's more an issue of financing," Jerz said. She felt that the town should await better financial times to undertake the project.

The proponents say there is no reason to waste time.

"This is not a playground or a library. This is a building for the people who protect us," McGoldrick said.

Complicating matters is the nature of the land deal for the proposed station. Paul Barry has offered to donate property off Route 3A for the purpose, but only if the town begins work on a station within two years. If the town votes not to accept the land, worth $500,000, the cost of building a station in the future will be higher since town would have to buy land for the project.

At the same time, however, selectmen decided to recommend approval of the land donation article unanimously last night, and the advisory committee did the same by majority vote.

Jerz said the committee recommended the article because it was under the impression that there were no strings attached to the land deal. Informed that the land donation was proposed with the understanding that a police station had to be built there, Jerz said she would have to reconvene the committee to discuss the article again.

While recommending against approval of the station, both the advisory and capital budget committees recommended appropriation of money for the library. "We feel the library is so close to completion that we may as well appropriate the extra $600,000," Baker said.

Selectman Tom Callahan said that he felt some misplaced priorities were apparent in placing construction of a new library ahead of a new police station. "What's wrong with biting the bullet and building the station now? That way all of our capital projects could be done in a couple of years," Callahan said.

Ice cream shop is up for grabs

The former Newport Creamery building is on the market for $750,000.

may grant special permits after a public hearing if certain conditions are met.

But Durgin of Conway said Tuesday, he hasn't been approached by any fast-food outlets. The asking price is $750,000 and Conway will market the property through various means including advertising in trade publications and signage on the building. He said the building could be expanded by 1,000 square feet and the site has parking for 50 cars.

He gave the location high marks.

"It's a highly visible location with great traffic counts," he said. "We think it will get a lot of interest."

Newport Creamery filed for bankruptcy protection in September and closed 19 of its under-performing restaurants including the one in Cohasset. The Bank of Rhode Island subsequently foreclosed on the Cohasset store and bought it back at auction last month, said Bill Lawler, vice president of Finard and Co., property managers of the plaza.

Expanding its reach, the Rhode Island-based Newport Creamery acquired Bergson's Ice Cream about two years ago and opened in Cohasset at the former Bergson's site. It carried much the same fare and price range as its predecessor. The restaurant filled the gap between fast food, such as McDonald's, and more expensive establishments, and offered an alternative to pizza. It was popular with senior citizens and young families who could get a meal there for $20-$30.

But the family restaurant was a tough draw and would have closed inevitably due to low volume, said Michael Warren, a consultant brought in by the bankruptcy trust to run day-to-day Newport Creamery operations.

"The Cohasset store wasn't doing that well," he said. Warren guessed the Cohasset store employed about 30 full-time and part-time workers.

Egan, the building commissioner, said establishments such as Newport Creamery "are fading from the American landscape."

"The family restaurant of today is like the 99 and places like that," he said, noting the Cohasset site is too small for a 99-type chain.

The 2-1/2-acre Route 3A parcel is owned by the California State Teachers Retirement System, which could lease the land to the new owner under a "ground lease" for up to 99 years.

The area is zoned highway business, which includes restaurant, retail and office space, Egan said.

Newport Creamery filed for bankruptcy in June and at that time planned to keep 30 of its 43 stores open. The purpose of a Chapter 7 bankruptcy is to protect the debtor from its creditors. A hearing on the matter was held in US Bankruptcy Court in August, at which time company executives said Newport Creamery could operate profitably if it closed more stores.

But in September a US Bankruptcy judge appointed a lawyer as an independent trustee to investigate the company's finances and either find a buyer for the company or liquidate its assets.

Newport Creamery has 12 remaining stores. Warren said the company hopes to find a buyer "who will come in turn Newport into a viable company."

Redistricting could award Norwell to Sen. Hedlund

"The swing vote in Norwell, similar to Hingham, will unhesitatingly vote Republican if there is a decent candidate," he said.

Morrissey said the redistricting plan is a mixed blessing.

"It's good news and bad news," he said. "Losing Norwell is disappointing in many respects, we've done some good work there. I've enjoyed that and have made many good friends.

"But on the other side, the redistricting puts Abington and Rockland back together."

Morrissey, who will pick up Hedlund's Braintree precincts, currently shares Abington and Rockland with Sen. Robert S. Creedon, Jr., D-Brockton.

The senate was scheduled to debate redistricting today after the Journal went to press. Hedlund – who is one of just six Republican senators and serves as the assistant senate minority leader — doesn't expect there to be opposition to the plan.

"You can put it in the bank pretty much," he said.

The state looks at redistricting every 10 years after the state census is conducted. A ballot question that passed last year aligned the state's census with the federal census and therefore, redistricting is in the works now rather than in 2004.

If the senate plan goes through, the district lines would change in January 2003, when the reelected or new senators are sworn in for a new term.

Gulf Association pitches plan to take stock of the Gulf

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@VIC.COM

Jim Spelman knows the importance of community-based organizations, especially when it comes to protecting the environment. While he appreciates the work state environmental agencies do, Spelman knows the best people to keep a close eye on the South Shore and its waterways are those living there.

As the president of the Gulf Association, the Scituate resident looks out onto the bodies of water in Scituate and Cohasset, and is determined to do whatever it takes to preserve, and in some cases, restore, their quality.

Lying between Scituate and Cohasset and fed by tributaries extending several miles inland, the Gulf or Gulph is one the few remaining unspoiled tidal estuaries along the East Coast.

Pollution problems from everything from use of pesticides and fertilizers to storm runoff and the proposed Greenbush rail restoration puts the Gulf at risk. And that's where the Gulf Association comes in. Established in 1961, to protect and preserve the tidal estuary, the association has been active in identifying and restricting pollution sources and educating citizens to regulations pertaining to land and water use in the Gulf and surrounding areas.

"If we have a comprehensive inventory then we can rank what the problems and concerns are."

— Jim Spelman, president of the Gulf Association

"If it weren't for organizations like the Gulf Association, this work wouldn't be getting done," Spelman said. "The (state's) budget isn't there to take every body of water and do an analysis."

Spelman wants his group to do the analysis. For years the association has conducted water testing programs in and area of the South Shore coastline known as the Gulf, and has monitored the surrounding watershed areas. The association has also worked to protect wetland areas. Now Spelman wants to take the program a step further by introducing a new plan called the Natural Resource Inventory.

Spelman will propose to initiate the program at the Gulf Association's annual meeting scheduled for Tuesday, Nov. 6 at 7:30 p.m. at the Lightkeeper's House off Border Street in Cohasset Harbor.

Targeting watershed issues in the region, the Natural Resource Inventory will examine the Gulf and its tributaries in conjunction with the state agency, Coastal Zone Management.

"We need to categorically decide what needs protection," Spelman said. "We'll collect available data augmented by field studies and work with people who know what they are doing. (We want to know) what are the potential problem areas, good qualities of this watershed, and then target most effectively the things that need preservation."

Spelman said roughly a dozen areas need attention, most notably the midge problem at Musquashicut Pond, the use of pesticides and fertilizers at Hatherly Golf Course and pollution stemming from storm drainage runoff. He also expressed concern over the water flowing from Lily Pond on Cohasset to Bound Brook and eventually to the North Scituate Village.

"If we have a comprehensive inventory then we can rank what the problems and concerns are," Spelman said, noting that the study will also monitor "the general temperament of the society we live in, recognizing we live in a coastal area with a lot of wetlands and (pesticides and fertilizers) can migrate into the water supply."

While no timetable has been set on the study, Spelman hopes the $10,000 to 20,000 study will give the state a better idea of what's in Scituate and Cohasset's backyards. Funding for the work will come through contributions to the association and grant monies.

"At the end of the day we'll have a pretty sophisticated document," he said. "We'll use it for our own purposes and convey it back to the state so they can augment their own body of information."

The study will also look at local laws, educating the public on things such as cutting brush or trees along marshland and fishing requirements.

The Gulf River that is shared by Scituate and Cohasset provides some of the most beautiful vistas in town.

Innkeepers put together travel guide to boost local tourism

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@VIC.COM

It's like being the middle child. Or having your birthday fall between two major holidays. By being sandwiched between a driving city (Boston) and an internationally known vacation spot (Cape Cod) —the South Shore is quite literally, stuck in the middle.

In an effort to get a piece of the tourism pie, local innkeepers are looking for ways to make their towns more than pit stops for Boston or Cape-bound vacationers. They're looking to show travelers what the South Shore has to offer.

Lee Vickers, owner of the Inn at Scituate Harbor has teamed up with Pat Stockford of the New Clarion in Hull and Kathleen Quist of Cohasset's Kimball's by the Sea to organize a guide to bring tourists to the South Shore.

Because the three specialize in coastal lodging, they already have that base covered. Now, they are trying to work with towns like Marshfield, Norwell and Hanover as well as their own to create a unified team determined to show off the best the region has to offer.

"Boston is a destination, Cape Cod is a destination, but nobody knows of these wonderful towns along the coast," Vickers said. "Individually we would not stand a chance of becoming a destination, but collectively we have much to offer. We're not focusing on what our three towns have to offer but the general area."

And when it comes to drawing tourists, Vickers and her innkeeper partners aren't overlooking nearby residents. Vickers feels that a sort of awareness about what's in some folk's backyards has been missing for some time.

"Boston is a destination, Cape Cod is a destination, but nobody knows of these wonderful towns along the coast."

— Lee Vickers of The Inn at Scituate Harbor

One of the main components of the draw would be a destination guide that lists the myriad attractions on the south shore. A card detailing the South Shore would be placed at the various visitor and tourist centers on the Mass Pike and other periodical advertising would take effect, Vickers said.

"We need to identify ourselves," Vickers said. "I personally am reaching out to my neighboring communities. It's for anyone who wants to get involved."

Vickers has contacted the Audubon Society in Marshfield, Norwell's Norris Reservation and South Shore Natural Science Center, and Scituate's Historical Society to enlist their help.

"There's a lot of history here, and history is something that people are looking for more of," Vickers said.

Helping with these efforts is John Galluzzo, who is special projects coordinator for Scituate's Historical Society and president of Fort Revere Park and Preservation Society in Hull.

"I think the whole thing is that we work with the Plymouth County Development Council, because this is by no means saying they don't cover our area, it's just that we definitely see the marketing potential," Galluzzo said, who noted one possible attraction could be a lighthouse weekend, as all three hotels overlook lighthouses.

Stockford said that the scenic beauty of the coastline is a major drawing card.

"This area is just beautiful and tourism is an industry that hasn't been tapped yet," Stockford said.

"People from the Berkshires and Western Massachusetts, they long to visit the ocean. Even though they are in New England, people associate fall foliage and lobsters with New England. They have the foliage but not the ocean and they are (currently) going to Connecticut, the Jersey Shore or even North Carolina to get to the ocean and they shouldn't have to do that," Stockford said.

Vickers is working in conjunction with numerous business groups on the South Shore to get this off the ground, including the Plymouth County Development Council, the New England Innkeepers Association, Massachusetts Lodging Association, the Greater Boston Convention and Visitors Bureau, the South Shore Women's Business Network and local chambers of commerce.

"We're very much connected in our industry," Vickers said.

Working with established travel organizations not only gives the effort credibility, but it also specifically caters to the Eastern Mass Contingent, a prime demographic for the group.

"Now that the world has changed on Sept. 11, drive-to destinations are even that much more popular," Vickers said. "We know it's a good time to say the Cape is wonderful but maybe (people want to stay closer)."

Keeping people interested in their own backyards as well as introducing them to someplace new is something Galluzzo is keen on.

"Now after the attacks, we have to look locally at people who want to do things on a tank of gas," he said.
